CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SENATE.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 4, 1905.

CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS, Vice-President of the United States, to whom the oath was administered at the close of the last regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, took the chair.

PRAYER.

Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, Chaplain of the Senate, said:

I will multiply my people, they shall not be few.
I will glorify them, and they shall not be small.
Their congregation shall be established before me;
And I will punish all that oppress them.
Their nobles shall be from themselves and their governor from the midst of them.
I will cause him to draw near
And he shall approach unto me.
And ye shall be my people and I will be your God.
The Law shall not depart from them.
Be thou strong and of good courage;
Be not afraid, neither be discouraged.
For the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.

Let us pray.

Father of Life, Father of Love, the work is done—for better, for worse—which Thou hast given this Congress to do. Grant Thy blessing to our endeavors. Thou wilt crown with Thine own success every good effort. Thou wilt forgive every mistake of ours. The past is gone, and we will forget the things behind. To-morrow is Thine, and we trust it to Thee.

For the homes and the country we pray again and again and always that they may come into Thy kingdom of love and hope and faith, pure as Thine own light, peaceable as Thine own purpose, and alive with Thy life. Give to Thy servants wherever they may go of Thine own strength that they may be fellow-workers together with God.

Almighty God, this nation is in Thy care, and this people seeks Thee to-day. We are in prayer for the country, that it may be more and more the happy nation which seeks Thee and finds Thee, as they find Thee who seek for Thee with all their hearts.

Thou hast made this people master of its own destiny. This people has chosen its leaders and its Congress for these years before them. And they ask, and we ask, Thy consecration on these years, for every father and mother, for every son and daughter, for every home, the help and blessing of the living God.

For the President, for the Vice-President, for the Congress, for the judges, and for the people we ask the blessing every hour of the living God.

For purity in their homes, for peace, for health, for strength, for all that God can give, for all that men can use in the service which is perfect freedom.

Hear us, answer us, and bless us as Thine own children in Christ Jesus.

Join me audibly in the Lord's prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

ADDRESS OF VICE-PRESIDENT FAIRBANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, I enter upon the discharge of the duties of the position to which I have been called by my countrymen with grateful appreciation of the high honor and with a deep sense of its responsibilities.

I have enjoyed the privilege of serving with you here for eight years. During that period we have been engaged in the consideration of many domestic questions of vast importance, and with foreign problems of unusual and far-reaching significance. We submit what we have done to the deliberate and impartial judgment of history.

I can never forget the pleasant relations which have been formed during my service upon the floor of the Senate. I shall cherish them always as among the most delightful memories of my life. They warrant the belief that I shall have in the discharge of the functions which devolve upon me under the Constitution, the generous assistance and kindly forbearance of both sides of the Chamber.

We witness the majestic spectacle of a peaceful and orderly beginning of an Administration of national affairs under the laws of a free and self-governing people. We pray that Divine favor may attend it and that peace and progress, justice and honor may abide with our country and our countrymen.

The Secretary of the Senate will now read the proclamation of the President of the United States convening the Senate in extraordinary session.

PROCLAMATION.

The Secretary (CHARLES G. BENNETT) read the proclamation, as follows:

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The oath of office having been administered to the President-elect by the Chief Justice of the United States, he delivered the following INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

MY FELLOW-CITIZENS: No people on earth have more cause to be thankful than ours, and this is said reverently, in no spirit of boastfulness in our own strength, but with gratitude to the Giver of Good who has blessed us with the conditions which have enabled us to achieve so large a measure of well-being and of happiness. To us as a people it has been granted to lay the foundations of our national life in a new continent. We are the heirs of the ages, and yet we have had to pay few of the penalties which in old countries are exacted by the dead hand of a bygone civilization. We have not been obliged to fight for our existence against any alien race; and yet our life has called for the vigor and effort without which the manlier and hardier virtues wither away. Under such conditions it would be our own fault if we failed; and the success which we have had in the past, the success which we confidently believe the future will bring, should cause in us no feeling of vainglory, but rather a deep and abiding realization of all which life has offered us; a full acknowledgment of the responsibility which is ours; and a fixed determination to show that under a free government a mighty people can thrive best, alike as regards the things of the body and the things of the soul.

Much has been given to us, and much will rightfully be expected from us. We have duties to others and duties to ourselves; and we can shirk neither. We have become a great nation, forced by the fact of its greatness into relations with the other nations of the earth, and we must behave as beseems a people with such responsibilities. Toward all other nations, large and small, our attitude must be one of cordial and sincere friendship. We must show not only in our words, but in our deeds that we are earnestly desirous of securing their good will by acting toward them in a spirit of just and generous recognition of all their rights. But justice and generosity in a nation, as in an individual, count most when shown not by the weak but by the strong. While ever careful to refrain from wronging others, we must be no less insistent that we are not wronged ourselves. We wish peace, but we wish the peace of justice, the peace of righteousness. We wish it because we think it is right and not because we are afraid. No weak nation that acts manfully and justly should ever have cause to fear us, and no strong power should ever be able to single us out as a subject for insolent aggression.

Our relations with the other powers of the world are important; but still more important are our relations among ourselves. Such growth in wealth, in population, and in power as this nation has seen during the century and a quarter of its national life is inevitably accompanied by a like growth in the problems which are ever before every nation that rises to greatness. Power invariably means both responsibility and danger. Our forefathers faced certain perils which we have outgrown. We now face other perils, the very existence of which it was impossible that they should foresee. Modern life is both complex and intense, and the tremendous changes wrought by the extraordinary industrial development of the last half century are felt in every fiber of our social and political being. Never before have men tried so vast and formidable an experiment as that of administering the affairs of a continent under the forms of a democratic republic. The conditions which have told for our marvelous, material well-being, which have developed to a very high degree our energy, self-reliance, and individual initiative, have also brought the care and anxiety inseparable from the accumulation of great wealth in industrial centers. Upon the success of our experiment much depends, not only as regards our own welfare, but as regards the welfare of mankind. If we fail, the cause of free self-government throughout the world will rock to its foundations, and therefore our responsibility is heavy, to ourselves, to the world as it is to-day, and to the generations yet unborn. There is no good reason why we should fear the future, but there is every reason why we should face it seriously, neither hiding from ourselves the gravity of the problems before us nor fearing to approach these problems with the unbending, unflinching purpose to solve them aright.

Yet, after all, though the problems are new, though the tasks set before us differ from the tasks set before our fathers who founded and preserved this Republic, the spirit in which these tasks must be undertaken and these problems faced, if our duty is to be well done, remains essentially unchanged. We know that self-government is difficult. We know that no people needs such high traits of character as that people which seeks to govern its affairs aright through the freely expressed will of the freemen who compose it. But we have faith that we shall not prove false to the memories of the men of the mighty past. They did their work, they left us the splendid heritage we now enjoy. We in our turn have an assured confidence that we shall be able to leave this heritage unwasted and enlarged to our children and our children's children. To do so we must show, not merely in great crises, but in the everyday affairs of life, the qualities of practical intelligence, of courage, of hardihood, and endurance, and above all the power of devotion to a lofty ideal, which made great the men who founded this Republic in the days of Washington, which made great the men who preserved this Republic in the days of Abraham Lincoln.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m., and the President pro tempore took the chair.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that, in accordance with the provision of Rule XI, I propose to move an amendment to the rules, which will modify Rule VII. For that purpose I submit the following resolution and ask that it be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the followng:

"Senators having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their name and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions, memorials, and bills of a private nature shall, with the approval of the Presiding Officer, be entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators presenting them, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of Debates for publication in the RECORD. Reports of private pension bills from the Committee on Pensions may be delivered to the Secretary of the Senate and by him, with the approval of the Presiding Officer of the Senate, be placed upon the Calendar and entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators reporting them, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of Debates for publication in the RECORD."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules, and printed.

Mr. BAILEY. If we could have unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota did not ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. But if it could be obtained——

Mr. LODGE. Under the rule, notice has to be given of an amendment of the rules.

Mr. BAILEY. Unanimous consent, of course, could suspend that in this, as in all other cases.

Mr. LODGE. Of course.

Mr. BAILEY. Having served in the other House, where the proposed rule prevails, I have found it so satisfactory that I hope to see it adopted by the Senate, still reserving to every Senator the right to present memorials and petitions, and to introduce bills according to the present practice whenever he desired to follow it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. This is merely permissive in its terms.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. I venture to say that if that could be made a part of our rules, within twelve months Senators would only take the floor for the purpose of introducing important matters.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Precisely. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. BAILEY. If this amendment is carefully drawn, and I have no doubt it is, it ought to be adopted at once, and without debate or objection.

AFFAIRS IN SANTO DOMINGO.

The injunction of secrecy was removed March 8, 1905, from the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate:

I wish to call the attention of the Senate at this executive session to the treaty with Santo Domingo. I feel that I ought to state to the Senate that the condition of affairs in Santo Domingo is such that it is very much for the interest of that Republic that action on the treaty should be had at as early a moment as the Senate, after giving the matter full consideration, may find practicable.

I call attention to the following facts:

1. This treaty was entered into at the earnest request of Santo Domingo itself, and is designed to afford Santo Domingo relief and assistance. Its primary benefit will be to Santo Domingo. It offers the method most likely to secure peace and to prevent war in the island.

2. The benefit to the United States will consist chiefly in the tendency under the treaty to secure stability, order, and prosperity in Santo Domingo, and the removal of the apprehension lest foreign powers make aggressions on Santo Domingo in the course of collecting claims due their citizens; for it is greatly to our interest that all the islands in the Caribbean Sea should enjoy peace and prosperity and feel good will toward this country. The benefit to honest creditors will come from the fact that for the first time under this treaty a practicable method of attempting to settle the debts due them will be inaugurated.

3. Many of the debts alleged to be due from Santo Domingo to outside creditors unquestionably on their face represent far more money than ever was actually given Santo Domingo. The proposed treaty provides for a process by which impartial experts will determine what debts are valid and what are in whole or in part invalid, and will apportion accordingly the surplus revenue available for the payment of the debts. This treaty offers the only method for preventing the collection of fraudulent debts, whether owed to Americans or to citizens of other nations.

4. This treaty affords the most practicable means of obtaining payment for the just claims of American citizens.

5. If the treaty is ratified, creditors belonging to other nations will have exactly as good treatment as creditors who are citizens of the United States, and at the same time Santo Domingo will be protected against unjust and exorbitant claims. If it is not ratified, the chances are that American creditors will fare ill as compared with those of other nations; for foreign nations, being denied the opportuntiy to get what is rightfully due their citizens under the proposed arrangement, will be left to collect the debts due their citizens as they see fit, provided, of course, there is not permanent occupancy of Dominican territory. As in such case the United States will have nothing to say as to what debts should or should not be collected, and as Santo Domingo will be left without aid, assistance, or protection, it is impossible to state that the sums collected from it will not be improper in amount. In such event, whatever is collected by means of forcible intervention will be applied to the creditors of foreign nations in preference to creditors who are citizens of the United States.

6. The correspondence between the Secretary of State and the Minister of Haiti, submitted to the Senate several days ago, shows that our position is explicitly and unreservedly that under no circumstances do we intend to acquire territory in or possession of either Haiti or Santo Domingo, it being stated in these letters that even if the two republics desired to become a part of the United States the United States would certainly refuse its assent.

7. Santo Domingo grievously needs the aid of a powerful and friendly nation. This aid we are able, and I trust that we are willing, to bestow. She has asked for this aid, and the expressions of friendship, repeatedly sanctioned by the people and the Government of the United States, warrant her in believing that it will not be withheld in the hour of her need.

DEATH OF SENATOR WILLIAM B. BATE.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, owing to the absence of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], I am charged with the sad duty of announcing to the Senate the death of Hon. WILLIAM B. BATE, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Mr. BATE died at his rooms at the Ebbitt House, in this city, at 6 o'clock this morning. The end came unexpectedly to his family and friends, after a very brief illness.

Mr. President, this is not the time for eulogy, but I may add that he met the dread messenger with the same calmness and Christian fortitude that characterized his conduct throughout a long and eventful career.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland submits resolutions, and asks that they be presently considered. The Secretary will read the resolutions.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Nashville, Tenn., for burial, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to invite the Representatives from the State of Tennessee to join the committee appointed by the Senate to escort the remains of the deceased to his place of burial.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the diplomatic corps (through the Secretary of State), and such Members of the House of Representatives as may be in the city of Washington, the Admiral of the Navy, and the Chief of Staff of the Army to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

HISTORY OF THE DEBT (FOREIGN).

1869.—Six per cent loan for £757,700. The Government of Santo Domingo entered into a contract with Mr. E. H. Hartmont, by which the latter agreed to provide a sum of £420,000 for the construction of roads and railways, of which £100,000 was to be retained by him as compensation, the nominal amount of the loan to be fixed by the contractor. The Government on their part undertook to pay, for the service of the interest and sinking fund, an annuity of £58,900 in half-yearly installments for twenty-five years, or a total of £1,472,500. Messrs. Peter Lawson & Co., acting for Mr. Hartmont, accordingly issued in London £757,700 in bonds secured upon a first charge on the customs duties of the ports of Santo Domingo and Puerto Plata, the Guano royalties, and the revenues arising from the forests and mines of the province of Samana.

The bonds were redeemable in twenty-five years by a 1¾ per cent accumulative sinking fund. The issue price was 70 per cent, but at this price the loan received little support from the public, and was subsequently disposed of, at rates ranging from 55 to 50 per cent, to Messrs. Bischoffsheim & Goldschmidt and others, by whom they were later disposed of to the public. The Government only acknowledges receipt of £38,000. Mr. Hartmont, however, asserted that he tendered personally to the Government £211,110, but that it was not accepted, owing to negotiations for annexation in progress at that time with the United States. Interest on this loan was paid for three years, but it was stated that these payments were made by the contractor and not by the Government.

1872.—Default took place, and the loan became, in 1875, the subject of a parliamentary inquiry.

1888.—Six per cent loan for £770,000 for the conversion of the 1869 loan, for which £142,860 was reserved, and the consolidation of the internal debt, which required £151,660. The balance of £475,480 was offered for public subscription at 83½ per cent by the Capital and Counties Bank and by agencies on the Continent. The bonds were secured by a first charge on the entire revenues of the Republic, including a special charge on the customs revenues, and were redeemable in thirty years by half-yearly drawings.

The terms for the conversion of the 1869 loan were £20 of the new stock in exchange for £100 of the old. Bonds to the nominal amount of £591,900 were exchanged by the Capital and Counties Bank. Bonds which had been drawn for redemption but which had remained unpaid, as well as bonds from which coupons were missing, were excluded from the conversion. The council at the time addressed a remonstrance to the government on this point, but without effect. (See below, 1897 and 1899.)

1890.—Six per cent Central Dominican Railway loan. Authorized issue, £900,000. Of this amount £575,000 bonds were offered for subscription on the Continent at 77 per cent in November, 1890. Few bonds, if any, are held in England. The objects of the loan were to develop the internal resources of the country, to form a reserve fund, to extinguish the internal floating debt, and to build a railway from Puerto Plata to Santiago. The loan was guaranteed generally by the government, and specially by (1) an annual subvention of £24,000 during fifty-six years; (2) the receipts on the first section of the line, and a mortgage on the second section and rolling stock.

1892.—Default took place on the external loans of 1888 and 1890.

1893.—A new 4 per cent consolidated gold debt for £2,035,000 was created, to be applied to the conversion of the 6 per cent loans of 1888 and 1890 (the outstanding amounts being £731,000 and £571,000, respectively), with arrears of interest amounting to 12 per cent, the whole to be converted at par. This, with expenses, absorbed £1,610,000 of the new stock, and the balance, viz, £425,000, was to be applied to completing the construction of the first section of the Central Dominican Railway.

The new bonds were redeemable in sixty-six years, with an accumulative sinking fund of one-half of 1 per cent per annum, and the loan was guaranteed by the whole of the customs duties of the Republic (less $93,000 per month to be retained by the Government for administrative expenses) and by a first mortgag on the line and its revenues and accessories. The collection of the customs dues was vested in a regie, controlled by the San Domingo Improvement Company, of New York. By the terms of the arrangement it was provided that should any suspension take place in the service of the loan, a financial commission, composed of representatives nominated by the Governments of Great Britain, the United States, France, Belgium, and Holland, was to be appointed forthwith to collect and distribute the above-mentioned dues.

1895.—Four per cent loan denominated "French-American reclamation consols." Authorized issue, $4,250,000 (£850,000). Of this amount $1,000,000 (£200,000) was publicly issued in Paris by the Banque Nationale de St. Dominigue at 302 francs per 515 francs bond (58.64 per cent). These bonds were redeemable at par in sixty-six years by means of a sinking fund of one-half per cent. The service was to be a first charge on the budget, and was secured on certain port dues and import duties, any deficiency to be made up by the Government out of general revenue. As in the case of the 1893 loan, in the event of a default, an international commission was to be appointed to collect and distribute the above-mentioned revenues.

1897.—The coupons due January 1 on the 1893 bonds were not paid owing to the regie not having received sufficient funds for the purpose.

A new arrangement was made during the year under which the bonds of 1893 and 1895 were converted into a new unified loan for £4,236,750, divided into £1,500,000 4 per cent bonds and £2,736,750 2¾ per cent bonds, apportioned as follows: £850,000 4 per cent bonds to the conversion at par of the French-American reclamation consols and £2,136,750 2¾ per cent bonds to the conversion of the 1893 bonds, with interest in arrear up to October 1, 1897, at par, the balance of the new issue to be applied to the conversion of the foreign and domestic floating debts of the Republic and to the expenses of the operation.

Both classes of bonds to be secured by a first charge on the general customs duties of the Republic and the special revenues assigned to the various debts included in the arrangement. These revenues to be collected by the régie under conditions similar to those above specified in the case of the 1893 and 1895 loans. The 4 per cent bonds were redeemable not later than October 1, 1980, and the 2¾ per cent bonds by October 1, 1999, by an accumulative sinking fund commencing October 1, 1901.

If the assigned revenues exceeded in any year the sum of £325,000 the surplus up to £34,200 to go to increase of interest on the 2¾ per cent bonds up to 4 per cent. Any further surplus to be applied to amortization of the same bonds up to a maximum of £6,495 per annum. Of the above issue £1,500,000 4 per cent unified bonds were offered to the public at 66. (In 1901 £351,400 of the unified bonds were canceled and returned to the Government.)

An arrangement was also made between the council and the St. Domingo Improvement Company for the settlement of the claims of the 1869 bondholders excluded from the conversion of 1888. The outstanding bonds of 1888 were also to be converted into bonds of the 1897 issue.

1899.—Default was made by the improvement company in the payment of the interest due April 1, 1899.

The bill given by the company for the settlement of the claims of the 1869 bondholders, in accordance with the arrangement made with the council on their behalf, were not paid at maturity, and the 1897 bonds to be given in exchange for the outstanding 1888 bonds were not delivered.

1900.—In March, 1900, an arrangement was made between the Government of Santo Domingo and the improvement company for the settlement of the debt. This arrangement provided for the funding of the interest on the 2¾ per cent and 4 per cent bonds of 1897 up to April 1, 1903, scrip certificates to be issued in exchange, bearing 4 per cent interest from January 1, 1901.

The interest on the 2¾ per cent bonds to be fixed at 3 per cent from October 1, 1899.

The 4 per cent unified bonds belonging to the Government (about £350,000) to be canceled.

From April 1, 1900, to April 1, 1903, the customs revenues up to the amount of $2,000,000 gold annually (exclusive of the export duties assigned to the redemption of bank notes) to be divided and applied as follows: 49 per cent to the budget; 3 per cent to the expenses of collection; 5 per cent to the payment of special "apartados."

The 43 per cent remaining to be apportioned as follows during the first year: 17 parts to the payment of the interior floating debt; 15 parts to the payment of the exterior floating debt contracted by the improvement company; 5 parts to the Government as an addition to the budget; 6 parts to the Government for the payment of claims and revolutionary expenses. During the second and third years the interior floating debt was to receive 21 parts, the exterior floating debt 16 parts, and the remaining 6 parts were to go to the payment of revolutionary expenses.

All existing securities and guaranties to the bondholders to be continued.

The Government, through the Régie, to cancel in three years the debased silver coinage and redeem the outstanding paper currency.

The improvement company to obtain the consent of a majority of the bondholders to the funding of the interest.

This arrangement fell through, as the improvement company were not able to obtain the requisite consent of a majority of the bondholders.

1901.—By a decree dated January 12, 1901, the Government of Santo Domingo took the collection of the revenues out of the hands of the improvement company. A commission was appointed by the Government to receive the proportion of the revenues assigned to the bondholders under the arrangement of March, 1900.

In June an arrangement was made with the French and Belgian bondholders, of which the following were the chief provisions:

1. The Government "during such time as the Dominican Republic is unable to settle in a favorable manner the existing financial crisis" to remit 15 per cent of the customs receipts, calculated on a minimum return of $2,000,000 gold per annum, for the service of the external debt, represented by the 4 per cent unified bonds and the 2¾ per cent obligations.

2. Identical interest, commencing on October 1, 1901, to be paid on both series of bonds.

3. The coupons due April 1, 1899, to April 1, 1901, to be redeemed by a payment of $50,000 gold.

4. Fifteen per cent of any possible excess over $2,000,000 gold in the customs receipts to be applied partly to interest and partly to amortization.

5. The service of the debt to be secured on the customs receipts of the port of Santo Domingo, and the associations representing the bondholders to appoint agents to receive the amounts due from the financial administration of that city.

6. A further 20 per cent of the customs receipts to be assigned to the payment of the floating debt and of the claims of the improvement company and its allied companies. On the extinction of one or the other of these descriptions of debt, the Government to apply the said 20 per cent to the integral payment of the service of the external debt.

The coupon due November 1, 1901, on bonds stamped as adhering to the Brussels arrangement was paid at the rate of 4 francs per £20 bond, but the next coupon went into default.

The above arrangement was not approved by the committee associated with the council, who declined to recommend the English bondholders to send in their bonds for stamping.

1903.—Under a protocol dated January 31, 1903, between the United States Government and the Government of Santo Domingo, it was arranged that the claims of the improvement company and its affiliated companies should be referred to international arbitration.

In February the coupon maturing April, 1902, on bonds whose holders had adhered to the Brussels arrangement of June, 1901, was paid at 3.85 francs per £20 bond.

1904.—In July the award in the above-mentioned arbitration was given. (See report below.)

[SEAL.] JNO. FCO. SÁNCHEZ,
Secretary of State for Foreign Relations of the Republic of San Domingo.

[SEAL.] W. F. POWELL,
Chargé d'Affaires of the United States of North America.

The Hon. J. G. Carlisle, having been named as arbitrator by the United States Government, and Señor M. de J. Galvan by the Dominican Government, the honorable Justice Gray was appointed umpire. Some delay occurred owing to further revolutionary troubles in the island, the government of Gen. Woss y Gil being overthrown by General Morales. The award of the arbitrators was delivered on the 14th of July.

The text of the award is as follows:

Award of the commission of arbitration under the provisions of the protocol of January 31, 1903, between the United States of America and the Dominican Republic, for the settlement of the claims of the San Domingo Improvement Company, of New York, and its allied companies.

Whereas by a protocol of agreement between the United States of America and the Dominican Republic, concluded at Santo Domingo City, January 31, 1903, it was agreed that the Dominican Government should pay to the Government of the United States the sum of four million five hundred thousand dollars ($4,500,000) in American gold, as full indemnity for the relinquishment by The San Domingo Improvement Company, of New York, The San Domingo Finance Company, of New York, The Company of the Central Dominican Railway, and the National Bank of San Domingo, of all their rights, properties, and interests, and in full settlement of all accounts, claims, and differences between the Dominican Government and the said companies, and that the terms on which the indemnity thus agreed upon should be paid should be referred to a board of three arbitrators, one to be named by the President of the United States, one by the President of the Dominican Republic, and the third by the President of the United States and the President of the Dominican Republic jointly, or, in case they should fail so to name him, by the President of the Dominican Republic from certain specified members of the United States Supreme Court or the United States circuit court of appeals:

Whereas for the purpose of carrying into effect the said protocol the undersigned arbitrators were appointed, viz: By the President of the United States, John G. Carlisle; by the President of Dominican Republic, Don Manuel de J. Galvan; and, as third arbitrator, by nomination of the President of the Dominican Republic, George Gray, one of the specified members of the United States circuit court of appeals; and

Whereas the said arbitrators, duly organized under the said protocol as a board of arbitration, have received and considered the cases and counter cases and the arguments filed thereunder by the contracting parties through their respective agents and counsel;

The board of arbitration does now adjudge and award, as the terms on which the indemnity above mentioned shall be paid, and the times, terms, and conditions on which the aforesaid company shall relinquish all their rights, properties, and interests mentioned in Article V of said protocol, and withdrawn from the Dominican Republic, thus constituting a full settlement of all accounts, claims, and differences between the Dominican Government and the said companies, the following:

ARTICLE 1.

TIME OF DELIVERY OF PROPERTIES.

(a) Within ninety days from the making of this award all rights and interests which the said companies have in the National Bank of San Domingo, consisting of six thousand three hundred and thirty-eight (6,338) shares of the capital stock thereof, shall be delivered by said companies to the Dominican Government on said Government giving to the companies a release by the bank of all claims against them.

(b) When the Dominican Government shall have paid the United States the sum of one million five hundred thousand dollars ($1,500,000), part of the said principal debt, the said companies shall deliver to the Dominican Government all the shares of the company of the Central Dominican Railway, which shall represent, include, and carry all the rights and interests in said railway referred to in paragraph 1 of Article V of said protocol, and will simultaneously deliver over the full possession of said railway, which shall be free of all debts, fixed or floating, of the said companies, and which shall be at least in as good condition, physically, as it now is, less wear and tear and damage by accident or acts of God or public disturbance or the foreign enemy.

The cost of restoring the railway from damage occurring in the meantime from any of such causes shall be first chargeable upon the net profits of the year, and any excess of such cost shall be paid by the Dominican Government out of its treasury in the same manner as hereinafter described in article 4.

If such payment of one million five hundred thousand dollars ($1,500,000), or any part thereof, shall be made by the Government, other than by the monthly installments hereinafter provided, such monthly installments shall, nevertheless, continue as herein provided.

(c) When the principal of said debt of four million five hundred thousand dollars ($4,500,000) shall have been reduced to two million seventy-six thousand six hundred and thirty-five dollars ($2,076,635), then shall begin the delivery of the bonds of the Dominican Republic, mentioned in paragraph 3 of Article V of the protocol, of the amount of eight hundred and thirty thousand six hundred and fifty-four pounds sterling (£830,654).

The bonds to be delivered shall not include any of the three hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred pounds sterling (£351,400) of unified scrip admitted by the companies to be the property of the Dominican Republic and heretofore tendered by the companies to the Dominican Government under the provisions of article 6 of the contract of April 18, 1900; and the said three hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred pounds sterling (£351,400) of unified scrip shall be delivered to the Dominican Government within thirty days from the date of this award.

With regard to the delivery of the amount of eight hundred and thirty thousand six hundred and fifty-four pounds sterling (£830,654) of bonds, exclusive of the three hundred and fifty-one thousand four hundred pounds sterling (£351,400) admitted to be the property of the Dominican Republic, this is understood to constitute a guaranty on the part of the companies that there are outstanding not more than one million one hundred and forty-eight thousand six hundred pounds sterling (£1,148,600) of 4 per cent obligations, including French-American reclamation consols (stamped and unstamped), unified 4 per centum scrip, and the 4 per centum bonds embraced in the eight hundred and thirty thousand six hundred and fifty-four pounds sterling (£830,654) of bonds to be delivered under this award, and that if any bonds of the issues of 1888, 1890, or 1893 shall hereafter be presented for conversion the companies will protect the Dominican Government.

The delivery of the bonds by such companies to the Dominican Government shall be in monthly installments pro rata to the payments of principal made to the U. S., so that one thousand dollars ($1,000) or two hundred pounds sterling (£200) of bonds shall be delivered for each five hundred dollars ($500) or principal debt paid.

ARTICLE 2.

RATE OF INTEREST.

The principal sum of four million four hundred and eighty-one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars ($4,481,250) and any and all balances thereof due and payable to the United States by the Dominican Government shall bear interest from the date of this award at the rate of 4 per centum per annum. All payments made shall be applied first to the interest accrued.

ARTICLE 3.

AMOUNT OF MONTHLY INSTALMENTS.

Said principal and interest shall be payable in monthly instalments of thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars ($37,500) each during the first two years, and of forty-one thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents ($41,666.66) each thereafter, to the financial agent of the United States on the first day of each month, beginning with the month of September, 1904, and shall be made in gold coin or currency of the United States or in such good bills of exchange as shall be acceptable to said agent. In the former case the cost of shipment to New York, and in the latter case the discount to maturity and charges incident to the collection of such bills of exchange, shall be added to the amount of the monthly instalment.

The net profits of the operations of said railway, until its delivery under article 1 hereof, during each year, beginning from the first day of July, 1904, as shall annually be stated by its general manager, shall be and constitute a further credit upon said principal debt.

ARTICLE 4.

SECURITY AND MODE OF COLLECTION.

Security.—The said debt and interest and the monthly payments thereof, as herein determined, shall be secured as follows:

The customs revenues and port dues of the ports of entry or custom-houses of Puerto Plata Sánchez, Samaná, and Montecristy, and of all other ports of entry or custom-houses now existing or which may hereafter be established on the coast or in the interior north of eighteen degrees and forty-five minutes of north latitude and east of the Haitian boundary, are hereby assigned and designated as security for the payment of the debt and interest herein mentioned.

Until payment of the said debt and interest the tariff of customs duties and port dues now prevailing shall not be reduced in any case or to any person more than twenty per centum without the consent of the United States.

The said debt and interest shall also constitute a first lien upon the Central Dominican Railway until its delivery to the Dominican Republic, as provided in this award.

Mode of collection.—The United States shall appoint a financial agent, who shall establish an office in the Dominican Republic.

In case of failure to receive during any month the sum then due, the said financial agent shall have full power and authority, by himself or by his appointees, to forthwith enter into possession of the custom-house at Puerto Plata in the first instance and to assume charge of the collection of the customs duties and port dues at that port, and to that end shall fix and determine those duties and dues, and enforce their payment, possessiong and exercising all the present powers of the "interventor de aduana" and of the "administrador de hacienda" and of all other officials authorized by law to participate in the collection and determination of duties and dues and the enforcement of their payment.

Said financial agent shall have power from time to time to appoint subordinate officials and employees. The customs duties and port dues shall be paid to him or to his appointees directly by the exporters and importers, or other persons liable therefor, in cash or in pagarés drawn to the order of said financial agent or his appointees, and such payment, and such payment alone, shall operate as a release of the goods and as a discharge of such importers and exporters and other persons from the liability for payment of such customs duties and port dues.

The Dominican Government may appoint such officials as it may deem proper for the purpose of inspecting the collection of duties.

Out of the sums collected by the financial agent and his appointees the said agent shall pay in the following order:

(a) The expenses of collection.

(b) The special apartados, as follows:

Port Montecristy: Improvement river Yaque concession; "Gobernación;" old foreign debt, one and one-half (1½) per centum of import duties; Colon, one-half (½) per centum of import and export duties.

(c) The sums due under this award.

(d) "Deuda Flotante Interior" and "Deuda Flotante Vicini," each five (5) per centum.

The excess, if any, after said payments, shall be paid over by said financial agent to the minister of hacienda of the Dominican Government at the time recognized by the United States or to his order. And the said financial agent shall render monthly an account of his collections and disbursements to the said minister of hacienda. He shall not be obstructed in the peaceful exercise of his duties under this award.

In case the sums collected at Puerto Plata shall at any time be insufficient for the payment of the amounts due hereunder, or in case of any other manifest necessity, or if the Dominican Government shall so request, the said financial agent or his appointees shall have and exercise at Sanchez, Samana, and Montecristy, and at any or all of the ports of entry or custom-houses within the territorial limits above described, all the rights and powers vested in him or them by this award in respect of the port of Puerto Plata.

This possession, power, and duty shall continue until six months after all arrears hereunder shall have been paid, and further, until the Dominican Government requests the restoration of the status quo ante. But said financial agent and his appointees shall reenter said custom-houses and resume the exercise of all the powers and authority as above described at any subsequent time when a like default in payment shall be made by the Dominican Government.

To the end that the capacity of the Dominican Republic punctually to make the payments required by this award shall not hereafter be impaired, the financial agent herein mentioned shall act as financial adviser to the Dominican Government in all matters affecting its ability to pay this award.

ARTICLE 5.

In the month of January of each year the Dominican Government shall make up, in accord with the financial agent herein mentioned, a statement showing the total fiscal revenues of the Republic for the preceding year.

ARTICLE 6.

The salaries and necessary travelling and other expenses of the financial agent and his appointees shall be paid by the Dominican Government in monthly instalments, in the same manner and with the same security as the monthly instalments of debt provided herein by article 4.

ARTICLE 7.

In addition to the monthly instalment of thirty-seven thousand five hundred dollars ($37,500) provided for in article 3, there shall be paid to the financial agent, during the month of August, 1904, a sum sufficient to pay an equal moiety of the compensation of the arbitrators and an equal moiety of all expenses of this arbitration, being the amount for which the Dominican Republic is liable under Article VIII of the protocol, which amounts shall be certified to the Dominican Government by the Department of State of the United States of America.

And in case of the failure to pay said amount or any part thereof during the said month of August the financial agent shall have and exercise in the collection thereof the same powers as hereinbefore conferred upon him in case of default in the payment of the said monthly instalments on the principal and interest of said debt.

This award is given and rendered at Washington on this fourteenth day of July, in the year one thousand nine hundred and four.

In witness whereof we have hereunto affixed our hands and seals.

It will be seen that the award is entirely favorable to the improvement company and that the security to be given by the Dominican Government is of a very stringent character. It is hoped that a settlement with the bondholders, the representation of whose interests has been confided to the council, may be shortly effected.

The council understand that owing to the disturbed state of the country throughout the period which has elapsed since the publication of their last report no official information has been published with regard to the financial or economic situation of the Republic.

The following information is extracted from the "Case of the United States," submitted to the arbitration commission:

Estimated revenue	$1,704,500
Estimated expenditure	1,704,500

On the side of revenue these estimates included $1,700,000 in respect of customs receipts, while under expenditure the assignment for the service of debts amounted to $782,000.

This budget was originally promulgated for the year ending April 30, 1901, but was subsequently extended up to June 30, 1901.

The actual receipts during the whole period of fourteen months amounted to $2,938,676.

No information is available concerning expenditure beyond the fact that in the fourteen months a sum of $552,678 was paid on account of the service of debts.

According to the report of the finance minister, this budgetary period closed with a deficit of $73,151.

1901–2:

Estimated revenue	$2,038,440
Estimated expenditure	2,038,440

Of the revenue receipts those to be derived from the customs were estimated at $2,000,000, and under the head of expenditure the appropriation for the debt service was fixed at $800,000.

This budget was afterwards limited to the eleven months from July 1, 1901, to May 31, 1902.

During this period the actual receipts amounted to $1,584,566, of which the Government kept $1,339,014 for its own purposes. This budgetary period is said to have closed with a deficit of $184,623.

Estimated revenue	$1,910,000
Estimated expenditure	[a] 1,910,000

The estimated product of the customs for this year amounted to $1,854,000, and the proposed expenditure included $988,917 for the debt service.

The actual receipts during this financial year are given at $1,663,575, of which the Government kept $1,435,875 for its own purposes.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. CULLOM, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

[a] According to the budget published in the Gaceta Oficial of May 31, 1902, and reproduced on page 351 of the council's report for 1901–2, the estimated expenditure amounted to $1,721,500.

RECESS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate take a recess until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., at which time it reassembled.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR WILLIAM B. BATE.

At 2 o'clock the casket containing the body of the dead Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber by pallbearers selected from the Capitol police.

Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, Chaplain of the Senate; Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, and Rev. S. H. GREENE occupied seats at the Secretary's desk.

A few minutes after 2 o'clock the diplomatic corps, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Chief of Staff of the Army entered the Chamber and were conducted to the seats provided for them. They were soon followed by the President of the United States and his Cabinet ministers, who were escorted to the seats assigned them. The family of the deceased Senator entered the Chamber and were shown to the seats reserved for them.

The committee of arrangements appointed by the Senate was accompanied by Representatives SIMS, BROWNLOW, and GAINES as members of the committee on the part of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The clergy will conduct the funeral ceremonies.

Rev. S. H. GREENE read the following Scriptural selections:

II Timothy iv, 6–8; I Corinthians xv, 49–58; John xiv, 1–7; Colossians iii, 1–4.

Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN delivered the following address:

A truly great and good man has passed away from the activities of our national life. To-day we have met to mourn his loss and to bury him. His name will not be lost in American history. His achievements will form a large part of the marvelous story of our national progress, linked as they are with those varied scenes of war and peace that make up the thrilling narrative of our short but eventful national career. I will not attempt at this sad hour to rehearse the tragic scenes upon many a hard-fought battlefield of two wars or the no less dauntless conflicts in the sphere of statesmanship. It is enough to give expression to a universal sentiment that through it all, in war and in peace, in victory and in defeat, he maintained a high and unimpeachable integrity, and to-day his death is lamented by our common and united country. At the proper time, according to the custom of this Senate, suitable expression will be given by his colleagues to the high esteem in which he was held in this Chamber, and without doubt a voice from both sides of this Senate will be raised to witness to the universal regard in which he was held. It may be in keeping with the solemn duties of this hour to speak of the peculiar reverence in which the loftiest characters of the generation to which he belonged ought to be held by those of us who have received the priceless inheritance of their lives. Our fathers lived amid scenes unknown to the present generation. A youth entering the service of his country as a private in the Mexican war, then forging his way ahead during the formative period which followed, again at the call to arms entering the bloodiest conflict of the century—such a youth was forged in a furnace unknown to modern times. And what matchless men they were! Valor and honor were mingled in their blood.

The low stoop to personal aggrandizement or preferment at the cost of their personal integrity and of their country's fair name was to them an utter impossibility. The eternal principles of right and duty had been defended at too large a sacrifice to be bought or sold. Such men have been the guardians of our national honor, and they are to-day our safest guides to future greatness and glory. Such an one was this honorable Senator. The wit of genius and the imagination of the poet may strive to put into fine art form the sentiments of some lives, but for one so simple and sincere a homelier phrase seems more appropriate, and perhaps none would better suit than simply this, "An honest man." It is my sacred privilege to speak one other word. The testing of his character in the varied conflicts of life accentuated perhaps too much his abhorrence of hypocrisy. A profession was to him more to be guarded than life itself. It was doubtless this that kept him many years from the formal profession of his religious belief. So that it was not until recent years that he gave his name to the Christian Church and received the holy rite of baptism according to the tradition of the faith of his fathers. But through all his life he was a man of prayer. He never taught himself to doubt, but with the sincerity of the normal mind of a child he sought the forgiveness and guidance and blessing of his heavenly Father. And this is our chief concern to-day. Whatever may have been his record in citizenship, we thank God for the assurance that in his innermost life he knew God, and to know Him is eternal life.

His last uttered prayer was one which was taught him by a faithful Christian mother. It is the prayer that has pushed back the horizon of time and sense to the very borders of the infinite and eternal—the inspiration of centuries, the key to life's mysteries, the passport to the spiritual and heavenly. When he came to that sublime expression of the loving surrender of the creature to the Creator there was a pause and a peculiar emphasis, "Thy will be done." So in his last moments, with the same high faith of our martyred President, he looked forward to the same guiding hand that had led him all the way, and he passed beyond our view in loving comradeship with his Lord.

Our heroes of other days are being gathered home. We thank God for their splendid achievements, and in the precious memory of their example we take courage for the battles yet to win.

Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, the Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Father of life, Father of love, we come to Thee. We do not pray for him. He prays for us in the larger life. No, Father, but for ourselves, for those who loved him best and knew him best, for the State which he served and for the country which he served, we, children of our God, are here in prayer to Thee. To ask that blessing which none can give but Thee, and that strength which comes from Thee alone. Not as if we could teach each other anything, but Thou, Father, Thou canst teach us everything, and Thou wilt teach us if we will listen; not as if we had any strength of our own, but we have infinite strength if we trust ourselves to Thee.

So we ask for these who can not minister to him longer in sickness in that happy home, that Thou wilt come to them as only a Father can come; that Thou wilt listen to their wish and strengthen them in every moment of weakness; that Thou wilt come to them as a loving father to his children.

And as we bear this body to the State which he loved and which he served, Father, we pray that Thou wilt be with those people there who wait to bless him and to thank Thee that they have had such service in their days of weakness and in their days of strength, in their days of trial and in their days of prosperity. Thou hast given to us those men who served Thee thus and who worked with Thee in their Father's vineyard and to go about Thy present business. Be with those who mourn the most as Thou hast been with those who served Thee in other days.

Father, for the country we pray, that as one by one these servants of Thine are removed to higher service the country may know how to train her boys and her girls into men and women who shall serve Thee as the living Father; that this may be that happy nation whose God is the Lord. And as we return to so many different homes and different duties this day we shall not be alone; the Holy Spirit is with us to be comfort, to be strength, and to be blessing.

For to-day and to-morrow and in all these new days teach us by the examples of courage and bravery which we have had for these days that are past—teach us as only Thine own living children can teach us—what is the worth of Thy Word and of Thy perfect Law. Give to us more of faith, Father, that we may see Thee as the pure in heart see Thee, that we may enter into that service which is perfect freedom. Give us more knowledge of this world which is before us and a keener sense of that larger life to which Thou hast been pleased to call him in Thy perfect mercy. Give us more of Hope.

And for this we pray also, that we may all bear our brother's burdens and so fulfill the whole law of Christ; that we may live in the common life; that we may serve in the common strength, each for all and all for each.

Not in vain for us are the examples of Thy children who have served Thee bravely and well; not in vain for us are this Gospel and the words which have come down to us century after century and generation after generation, if only we consecrate ourselves anew to Thy service. If only even at the moment of death and at the open grave we determine here and now and to-day that we will serve the living God, that we will walk in Thy pathway, and that Thy law shall be our law.

Hear us, answer us, and bless us, in Him who is the resurrection and the life, with that blessing which is for ever and ever.

Join me all, audibly, in the Lord's prayer.

Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

So may the very peace of God which passeth all understanding go with us and bless us. So may the Lord Jesus Christ, who is our resurrection and our life, show to us this heavenly Word, yes, and this present Holy Spirit. He is the Comforter; He is the only comforter. May he go with us always. Amen.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 15, 1905.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

AFFAIRS IN SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to send to the Senate, for use in executive sessions, copies of the instructions given to Commodore Dillingham and Minister Dawson, or either of them, regarding Dominican affairs, and copies——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is being read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. It seems to be business for the Senate to consider in executive session.

Mr. TELLER. It does not refer to the executive session except for use, and I insist that it shall be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can not deprive me of the right to have it read.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know; the Senator might.

Mr. TELLER. He will not, unless it is by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The doors can be closed on the request of two Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senate can do some things in spite of the wish of one Senator.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator may object to the consideration of the resolution, but he can not object to its being read.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know that I wish to object either to its consideration or its reading, but the Senator seems to be very vigorous in his declarations, as though we have no right to say anything about it at all.

Mr. TELLER. I do deny the right of a Senator to interrupt the reading of the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. A Senator has a right to interrupt the reading for the purpose of ascertaining what it is about. It seemed to be a paper that pertains to executive session, and if it is I submit to the Senator himself whether it ought not to be read and considered in executive session.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no hesitation in saying that it is a proper resolution for the open session.

Mr. CULLOM. The resolution may be read.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Secretary to read it from the beginning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to send to the Senate, for use in executive sessions, copies of the instructions given to Commodore Dillingham and Minister Dawson, or either of them, regarding Dominican affairs, and copies of all correspondence and telegrams relating to Dominican affairs, or relating to any proposed agreement, protocol, or treaty between the United States and San Domingo, from July 1, 1904, to the 1st of March, 1905.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that I recognize the right of the Senator to object, but that this is the place, in open Senate and not in secret executive session, for the introduction of resolutions of this character. Then they go on the files with the public documents of the country, and there is a record kept of them. When the Secretary of State, or rather the President, sends here the report, he has a right to say to us, "I desire to have this considered as a secret matter," and then the Senate will, as a matter of course, so consider it.

Mr. President, the information I call for is not in the secret archives of the Government. Every citizen of the United States, so far as I know, has a right to walk in the Department and look at the papers. I know that every Senator and Member of the other House has a right to go and look at them. I have a right to ask for a copy of them for my own use if I choose.

I wish to say that I take this course for the purpose of preserving the traditions and usages of the Senate in obtaining information from the Executive Departments. I recognize the right of the Senator to object; and the resolution must lie over one day, as objection is made to its present consideration.

AMERICAN NATIONAL INSTITUTE AT PARIS, FRANCE.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for leave to introduce a bill and have it read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is the bill touching the American National Institute at Paris. It passed the Senate and was reported favorably in the House, but was not considered in that body. The city of Paris has made a gift of a fine site, costing $100,000, and I simply desire that the bill may be introduced and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations so they may know there that the matter is still alive.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to object, but I wish to ask the Senator from Maine why he requests unanimous consent to introduce a matter of this kind?

Mr. FRYE. Because it has not been called in regular order.

Mr. TELLER. Oh!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be introduced.

Mr. FRYE. In connection with it I present certain papers, to be referred with the bill to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

The bill (S. 1) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France, was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, which were ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In this connection the Chair lays before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting certain information relative to the incorporation of the American National Institute at Paris, France.

Mr. FRYE. It should be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT ON BEEF INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, requesting that the Senate authorize the reprint, for the use of his Department, of 5,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on the Beef Industry; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

PROHIBITION IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present a brief statement giving reasons why the prohibition of the liquor traffic should continue to be the policy in the Indian Territory after the inauguration of statehood. I move that the statement be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours and twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 16, 1905, at 12 o'clock meridian.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AFFAIRS IN SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, yesterday, as the Journal shows, I introduced a resolution of inquiry. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether he has any objection to considering that resolution now?

Mr. CULLOM. I think I would prefer that the Senator should withhold it.

Mr. TELLER. I am not disposed to withhold it if I can avoid doing so, because I think we ought to have the information called for by the resolution before we act upon the treaty. If the treaty is to be acted upon at this session, then I think we ought to have the information. If not, of course then it is immaterial.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will have an opportunity to press the resolution after to-day, if he desires to do so.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; but if we should be called upon to vote on the treaty this week we would have to vote without the information.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not think there is much information to be added to what we already have.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator objects to the resolution I shall not press it this morning, but I wish it to retain its place so that I can call it up to-morrow. I do not wish to have the resolution lose its place.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table, and it will be laid before the Senate to-morrow in regular order.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 17, 1905.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege, and ask that the paper which I send to the desk may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama rises to a question of personal privilege, and asks that the paper which he sends to the Secretary's desk may be read. Without objection, it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

MORGAN SEES A PLOT—SENATOR ACCUSES CROMWELL OF COMPLICITY IN TREATY—TELLS OF DOMINICAN AFFAIRS—ALABAMAN SURPRISES THE SENATE IN THE COURSE OF A LONG SPEECH BY DETAILING AN ALLEGED SCHEME BY THE LAWYER WHO NEGOTIATED THE CANAL SALE TO SECURE VALUABLE CONCESSIONS IN REPUBLIC.

Senator MORGAN, of Alabama, held the floor of the Senate all of yesterday. He told of what the Democrats declare to be a sensational plot engineered by William Nelson Cromwell, of New York, to drag the United States into Santo Domingo affairs. Republican Senators were inclined to pooh-pooh the story as a bugaboo, although several of them said there was enough in it, apparently, to warrant an investigation before proceeding any further with the pending treaty.

Mr. MORGAN spoke for four hours, most of the time extemporaneously. He laid before the Senate a number of documents sustaining his contention that William Nelson Cromwell was the mainspring of the whole Santo Domingo situation. He bitterly denounced Mr. Cromwell as the man who has instigated the trouble at Panama for the purpose of selling the New Panama Canal Company to the United States, and declared that he was now at work endeavoring to drag the United States into Santo Domingo for the purpose of making valuable certain concessions which would be worthless without the guaranty of this country.

The material for much of Mr. MORGAN'S talk was furnished to him, he said, by Mrs. Reeder, a former resident of Alabama, whose maiden name was Rawles. She and her husband, operating under the name of the Reeder syndicate, were described as international speculators, who dabbled in the securities of Latin-American Republics, and dealt in concessions for railroads, power plants, and so on.

HAD INFLUENCE WITH MORALES.

Mrs. Reeder, described as a very bright woman, is said to accuse William Nelson Cromwell of originating the plan for the intervention of the United States in Dominican affairs. His scheme, she alleges, brought to naught a number of concessions which she and her husband had obtained from the Morales Government.

Mr. MORGAN alluded repeatedly to a certain proposed "treaty" between the United States and Santo Domingo which the Reeders had negotiated with President Morales. Mr. PLATT of Connecticut suggested that the Senate would be enlightened if the treaty itself should be laid before it. Mr. MORGAN thereupon sent to the Secretary's desk a copy of the document, which was read. It caused laughter among Republican Senators, who described it as a preposterous document, making all sorts of provisions for the protection of Santo Domingo, insuring certain fat concessions for the Reeders, and giving the United States the short end of the arrangement. When this paper was read several Republican Senators described Mr. MORGAN'S exposé as a fiasco. Mr. FORAKER took occasion to defend Mr. Cromwell, describing him as a man of the highest standing at the bar, without a stain upon his professional reputation.

Mr. MORGAN alleged, at least by implication, that after the Reeders had obtained certain concessions from Santo Domingo, and while Mr. Reeder was at Santo Domingo preparing to sign others, a cablegram had been received by Morales from Mr. Cromwell, urging him not to grant the concessions, as the United States had been induced to step in and assume the burden of Santo Domingo's affairs. Morales was assured by Mr. Cromwell, according to Senator MORGAN, that it would be to his advantage to deal directly with the United States, and he was urged to invite the United States to take charge of the financial affairs of that Republic.

PROTECTION FROM THIS GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Cromwell, it was said, pointed out to Morales that he would remain President of Santo Domingo, protected by the strong arm of the United States, and would receive a percentage of the customs revenues without any responsibility on his part. Senator MORGAN intimated that an investigation would prove that Mr. Cromwell had obtained concessions for nearly everything of value in the islands, as well as taking care of the interests of foreign bondholders by inducing the United States to take charge of Santo Domingo.

Mr. LODGE was prepared to make a speech yesterday in support of the treaty, but was unable to get the floor. Mr. FORAKER also intends to speak. No change in the programme is known to have occurred, as a result of the allegations made by Senator MORGAN, and it is still expected that the Senate will adjourn to-morrow without acting on the treaty. The Senate is ready to adjourn now, but is waiting some nominations from the President, among them those of United States judges in Illinois.

A proposition was advanced yesterday by Mr. FORAKER as a possible solution of the Santo Domingo business next winter, in case it is still desired to take charge of the country's finances. It is said to have been approved by President Roosevelt. This proposition is to pass a joint resolution by Congress authorizing the President to take such steps as he sees fit in administering the finances of Santo Domingo. Such a resolution, requiring only a majority vote, could be passed without trouble over Democratic opposition, and it is argued that the joint resolution annexing Hawaii to the United States is a precedent establishing the constitutionality of the proceedings. In this case no treaty would be required. Serious doubts were expressed, however, by Senators to whom Mr. FORAKER outlined his plan, as to its constitutionality.

NEWLANDS RESOLUTION ADOPTED.

The Newlands resolution was agreed to, calling upon the President, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate certain information in regard to Dominican affairs.

Despite the fact that it is recognized that there are not enough votes for the ratification of the Santo Domingo treaty, there was a general return yesterday of Republican members who have been absent. Senators LODGE and KITTREDGE, who have been away for a few days, were in their seats, and Senator DOLLIVER is within reach if a vote should be called for.

After the reading of the Journal yesterday Mr. TELLER asked if there were objections to consideration of his resolution of inquiry concerning Santo Dominican affairs. Mr. CULLOM, who had arisen to move an executive session, said that an opportunity would be given to-day for the consideration of the resolution.

"I know that," said Mr. TELLER, "but if we are called to vote on the treaty this week, we would have to act without the information."

"Well, I do not believe the information we would get is worth much, anyway," said Mr. CULLOM.

Mr. TELLER said that he did not want the resolution to lose its place, and it was agreed that he might call it up to-day. The Senate then, at 12.08, went into executive session, which lasted till 5.37 p. m., with a brief interim for luncheon.

READY TO ADJOURN TO-MORROW.

Several prominent Senators had conferences yesterday with President Roosevelt regarding the Santo Domingo treaty. It was the opinion of all of them that nothing could be accomplished by prolonging the session at this time, and it was indicated to the President that the Senate would be ready finally to adjourn to-morrow unless he had further business to bring to its attention.

Even yet, it is understood, no absolute agreement has been reached regarding the treaty, but the disposition is simply to lay it aside without action.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the question of privilege to which I arise is really the privilege of the Senate of the United States. So far as I am personally concerned, I am not in the slightest degree interrupted, or offended, or distraught by anything that the paper has said which I have just had read at the desk. Senators here know that long ago when the Hay-Herran treaty was under discussion in this body I made a speech, or was supposed to have made a speech, on that treaty, making certain statements with reference to the Government of Colombia and its attitude toward the United States, its misfortunes, and the like of that. Somebody sent by telegraph to the City of Mexico a report of that speech, a false report of it, one that contained just enough of truth to carry the falsehood on its back and give it some credence. In two days from that time General Reyes, who was then minister from Colombia to Mexico, replied by telegraph to what I had been reported as saying, and it was printed in this same newspaper.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the newspaper?

Mr. MORGAN. The Post.

Mr. CULLOM. Of Washington?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Of course it was impossible in that case that General Reyes could have been informed otherwise than by telegraph, emanating from the Post, I assume, of what was alleged to have occurred in the executive session of the Senate, and his reply was sent by telegraph to the Post, and printed in two or three days after the speech which was imputed to me was made.

I at that time made an open statement in regard to the matter, in which I dealt with some degree of asperity in respect of a minister of a foreign government who would willfully violate the rules of the Senate of the United States by telegraphing matter that concerned the reputation and the honor of one of the members of this body, and I made an intimation at that time that I thought the Senate of the United States ought to protect its membership against such outrages. But I was in a minority, a great minority, upon that question, and no attention was paid to it.

Now, there is a repetition in the same paper of an equally defamatory and an equally outrageous statement in regard to my conduct in the Senate. Senators here know the discussion which took place. I need make no statement to them, no appeal to them at all, in respect to my attitude upon this question. There is not a Senator in this body, I am sure, who makes the slightest impeachment of anything that I have said or done in the discussion of this treaty. There is not one here who can impute to me in any respect a partisan line of conduct in the action I have taken or the discussions I have made upon this treaty.

Whether the statements contained in this paper are true or false I am not permitted to say. I will not violate the rules of the Senate by volunteering any statement upon that subject. The world can take it as true of false, just as they please. But they must take it upon the testimony of a newspaper that resorts to one of two methods to gain information, either of which is entirely unjust to the Senate, to the country, to our relations with foreign governments, and unjust to Senators personally. Those two sources of information are, first, a Senator, and, secondly, some of the people who have access to rooms that lie near to the Senate Chamber.

The paper which has been read appears to be well edited. It contains doubtless some falsehoods. It contains doubtless some truths. But the editor of it is a skillful man. He knows how to mix the lies with the truths, so as to defame the one and support the other. There is no question but that he is a scholarly man. I do not know whether it was made up by actual report made to him or whether it was by some process of wireless telegraph. That is not for me to say, nor do I care. I will state this—I feel authorized to state it: Efforts have been made here to have this debate carried on in public. A majority did not agree with the proposition. Efforts have been made to call in the Official Reporters and swear them, and have a stenographic report made of every word that might be uttered on this floor. That was not agreeable to the majority of the Senate. I do not speak of the political majority.

Failing in these efforts, Mr. President, I am left without any sort of resource in any answer I could make. I can not answer these statements without a violation of the proprieties of the Senate, either to admit them or deny them. It is an unfortunate attitude for any man or body of men to occupy, who are here commissioned as United States Senators, that they must be held bound by honor to secrecy in respect to their own attitude and their own remarks upon this floor in what they bring forward for the good of the country, for its protection against lying, for its protection against undue haste in the consideration of a supreme law of the United States, for these treaties, when they are ratified, become the supreme law of the United States in virtue of the direct requirement or statement of the Constitution. A Senator is here bound by the rules of the Senate to absolute secrecy in what he has said.

Yesterday I was kept on the floor for a long time, as Senators remember, by a current discussion of matters, a mere current discussion among Senators, and I was prevented by that from really completing the speech I intended to make. I had not left my desk, I had not more than taken my seat, when a man who is accustomed to being about the lobbies of the Capitol here, a reporter, rushed up to my desk and asked me to give him a statement about the great imbroglio that had been sprung, or something of that sort. I said to him, "Sir, you have no right to ask me a word about what occurred in the Senate. You will get no information from me." I repelled his advance. That ought to have sufficed. A man who will then do that to a Senator ought to be expelled from that gallery and never permitted to take a seat there again, and his paper ought not to be permitted to be represented in that gallery.

Now, what am I to say? I can only say that the Post got this information from some corrupt source, and a paper that professes to be a great paper, to enlighten the public and to encourage and promote public morals and public decency, has no right to print upon its own authority and to assert to the world that statements are true which must have been derived surreptitiously from a corrupt source. That paper knew that somebody had violated some of the important and obligatory regulations that the Senate of the United States has ever found it necessary to adopt in order to get that information or that assertion.

Well, the man or the paper that makes it a business to go before the world and to utter statements in regard to the private affairs of individuals or of the Senate of the United States upon an authority that he or the newspaper knows to be corrupt, and to cast such a stigma, does violence to its own professions of virtue and decency, and is utterly false to the honor of the country.

This statement in the Post puts me in conflict with certain private persons in the United States. I do not shrink from any conflict that belongs to my duties as a Senator—not at all. I take no shelter under privileged speech or communications, and a man in the Senate can not take shelter under a privileged communication when he is not allowed to speak to the world what he says to the Senate. I take no shelter under any aspect of this matter as a privileged communication, but I am confronted with a necessity which I trust the Senate will indulge me in trying to avail myself of the opportunity to correct.

I have believed always, and I think the country believes, that there is very much connected with the transactions of Santo Domingo for the last few years which is entirely unknown and has the appearance of having been concealed. I make no accusations against any officer of the Government of the United States or anybody else in this matter, except to say that it has the appearance of having been concealed. That appearance has been placed upon the situation by the statements of newspapers, for Senators have not known what the facts are in full. Considering the subject-matter that is before us for consideration and action, it is very necessary, in my judgment, that the best possible means should be employed to ascertain what are the specific and actual facts that surround the situation, which has been made particularly troublesome and vexatious by the assertions of the newspapers here and in Santo Domingo.

I have therefore, Mr. President, found myself compelled to ask unanimous consent of the Senate for action upon a resolution that I have drawn.

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is instructed to examine into and report the facts relating to the protocol of January 31, 1903, alleged to have been entered into between the United States, represented by W. F. Powell, chargé d'affaires, and the Dominican Government, represented by Jno. Fco. Sanchez, ministro de relaciones exteriores, and the facts relating to an award based on said protocol made by George Gray, president, and John G. Carlisle and Manuel De J. Galvan, dated the 14th of July, 1904.

And that said committee will inquire into and report the facts of the transaction upon which said protocol and award are based, and of the conduct of the persons and corporations who were connected with the transactions that led to the making of said protocol and award, and whether any fraud or oppression has been perpetrated in connection therewith, and by whom committed——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to suggest that we could all hear much better if the Secretary would read the resolution? We can not hear the reading satisfactorily at all.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall be very glad to have the Secretary read it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary proceeded to read the resolution, and read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is instructed to examine into and report the facts relating to the protocol of January 31, 1903, alleged to have been entered into between the United States, represented by W. F. Powell, chargé d'affaires, and the Dominican Government, represented by Jno. Fco. Sanchez, ministro de relaciones exteriores, and the facts relating to an award——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, it occurs to me that this subject ought first to be considered in executive session. This is a part evidently of the general discussion and consideration of the treaty that has been before the Senate in executive session for a number of days—for weeks, I may say. Notwithstanding the villainous lot of stuff which has been written by somebody and printed in the Post, it occurs to me that we ought to adhere to our rule in considering these matters in executive session, unless we want to abandon executive sessions entirely.

Mr. MORGAN. There is not one word in the resolution that relates to any executive business before the Senate in any sense. I insist on having my proposition read. I have the floor as a Senator. The Senator from Illinois of course has the majority with him, and he can take the course he suggests, if he wants now to dive into an executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suspend for a moment?

The Chair holds that the Senator from Alabama has a right to have the resolution read at the desk for the information of the Senate. It is within the province of any Senator to object to its consideration. It is within the power of the Senator from Illinois, if he wishes to interrupt the proceedings of the Senate in legislative session, to move an executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that is correct, Mr. President.

Mr. MORGAN. I was reading the paper, and I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Secretary to send the resolution to me and I will read it.

Mr. CULLOM. I submit to the honorable Senator from Alabama that I sympathize with the efforts he has been making with reference to the violation of the rules of the Senate, but——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Chair whether it is not in order at any time, no matter who has the floor, to make the point that the business brought before the Senate shall be considered in secret legislative session or in executive session. It is a question of order, and it is always in order.

Mr. MORGAN. How does the Senator know what is in the paper before it is read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it is in order for any Senator at any time to move that the doors be closed, and if there is a second to the motion the doors must be closed.

Mr. CULLOM. As I was saying, I sympathize with the remarks of the Senator pretty fully in regard to the violation of the rules of the Senate by a newspaper man or by any man, a Senator or anybody else, who should give out or pretend to give out such a statement as has been read here in the presence of the Senate this morning. But I do hope that we may have some ordinary business arrangement, according to the rules of the Senate, with reference to closing the doors or going into executive session. I submit the subject the Senator is now beginning to discuss ought to be discussed with closed doors or in executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Illinois kindly point out what part of this paper it is that he objects to?

Mr. CULLOM. It bears on a question pertaining to a treaty pending before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. That can not be shown, and as a matter of privilege I insist that I shall be allowed to proceed, as I have the floor, and to lay the proposition before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. According to the suggestion of the Chair, if the Senator proceeds, I shall claim the right to interfere and move an executive session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the Senator from Alabama is within his rights in reading the resolution to the Senate. The Chair would call the attention of Senators to Rule XXXV:

> On a motion made and seconded to close the doors of the Senate on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a Senator, require secrecy, the Presiding Officer shall direct the galleries to be cleared, and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain closed.

In the opinion of the Chair the Senator can not be prevented from reading his resolution except by proceeding under this rule.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not want to do that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. As I was interrupted, I do not know where I left off the reading. I had read a few lines and I will commence at the beginning.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the resolution is to be read, I hope it will be read loud enough so that we can hear it. I do not understand that objection is made to its being read by the Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senate will hear me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MORGAN (reading):

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is instructed to examine into and report the facts relating to the protocol of January 31, 1903, alleged to have been entered into between the United States, represented by W. F. Powell, chargé d'affaires, and the Dominican Government, represented by Jno. Fco. Sanchez, ministro de relaciones exteriores, and the facts relating to an award based on said protocol, made by George Gray, president, and John G. Carlisle, and Manuel De J. Galvan, dated the 14th of July, 1904.

And that said committee will inquire into and report the facts of the transaction upon which said protocol and award are based, and of the conduct of the persons and corporations who were connected with the transactions that led to the making of said protocol and award; and whether any fraud or oppression has been perpetrated in connection therewith, and by whom committed.

And that said committee will ascertain and report by what authority of the United States, or of any officer or agent of the Government, if any, said protocol and award was made, and what proceedings have been taken and conducted by the United States, or any officer or agent of the United States, to execute said protocol or to enforce said award, whether by civil or military power; and especially as to the use of the power and authority of the United States in the collection of customs dues in ports or customs-houses of the Dominican Government; and what sums of money, if any, have been so collected, and by whom collected, and the disposition that has been made of such funds.

2. That said committee further inquire and report the facts that attended the making of a protocol signed on January 20, 1905, by Albert C. Dillingham and Thomas C. Dawson for the United States and Juan Fco. Sanchez and Federico Velasquez for the Dominican Republic; and the orders and instructions, if any, under which said protocol was negotiated, concluded, and signed, issued from any officer or Department of the United States Government.

And that said committee ascertain and report what has been done, in pursuance of said protocol, or of any agreement therein contained, to execute or enforce the same by any civil or military officer of the United States, in any port or place in Santo Domingo; and by what authority or by whose order or direction the same has been executed and enforced, and what was done by any such person in the execution or enforcement thereof.

3. That said committee is further instructed to inquire and report what correspondence, if any, has taken place between any officer or Department of the Government of the United States and the Dominican Government or any person claiming to represent such Governments, since 1897, in relation to the creation of any treaty relation with said Government looking to the annexation of the possessions of such Government to the United States, or the lease of any of its possessions to the United States, or to the granting of naval or coaling stations by the Dominican Government to the United States, or for any protectorate over the Dominican Government by the United States, or in any relation to the acceptance by the United States of any trust or fiduciary relation toward the Dominican Government, or its creditors, or any relation between them looking toward the adjustment of the debts of the Dominican Government and the administration of its revenue laws for the payment thereof.

4. That in the execution of this resolution said committee, or a subcommittee thereof, to consist of not less than three members, shall have leave to sit at any place in the United States in the recess of Congress, and to summon witnesses and examine them under oath, and to compel the production of papers at any such investigation.

5. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk and a stenographer and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is required to detail such deputies as may be needed to assist the committee in the performance of its duties.

I respectfully ask unanimous consent for present action on the resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to unanimous consent. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no appropriation whatever in the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the resolution distinctly. If there is no expense——

Mr. MORGAN. There is no provision for any expense. It is only when an appropriation is made that a reference is required.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama is correct. The Chair understood that the resolution involved an appropriation.

Mr. MORGAN. No; it does not. It was purposely left out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the resolution, under the objection, will not now be considered.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for information whether the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama not having been read by the Secretary, it would be considered as properly before the Senate? If not, I ask that it may be read by the Secretary and then go over under the objection. I do not know whether the mere reading by the Senator from Alabama will be deemed sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It would not be sufficient. The resolution should be read by the Secretary.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that it be read and then go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks that the resolution just read by the Senator from Alabama shall be read by the Secretary, and that it then go over.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the reading to which the Senate has listened may be considered as the reading by the Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MORGAN. There is no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection; and the resolution will be regarded as though read by the Secretary.

EMPLOYMENT OF MESSENGER.

Mr. BURNHAM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Cuban Relations be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided by law, in lieu of the assistant clerk now authorized.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CHARLES E. CONRAD.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Montana, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Charles E. Conrad, no adverse report having been made thereon.

AFFAIRS IN SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, yesterday I called up a resolution of inquiry that I had presented, and it went over with the understanding that it should be called up to-day. I ask that it may be laid before the Senate now. It need not be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado calls up the resolution submitted by him on a former day.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on the 15th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to send to the Senate, for use in executive sessions, copies of the instructions given to Commodore Dillingham and Minister Dawson, or either of them, regarding Dominican affairs, and copies of all correspondence and telegrams relating to Dominican affairs, or relating to any proposed agreement, protocol, or treaty between the United States and San Domingo, from July 1, 1904, to the 1st of March, 1905.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to amend the resolution. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has suggested to me that it is not in proper form, and that I should call on the President, not by direction but by request, instead of the Secretary of State. I always bow to any suggestion the Senator from Wisconsin makes in a matter of this kind, even when he does not convince me that he is right. Fearing that I may be wrong and being almost certain that he is right, I wish to strike out the words "Secretary of State" and insert "President," and to strike out "directed" and insert "requested."

Mr. President, I wish to say a word as to what I think is the rule. I think we direct all Cabinet officers. The Senator thinks there is an exception, because of the importance of the files relative to foreign affairs in the office of the Secretary of State. I can see some force in that, but my understanding is that we direct the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, or any other Cabinet officer to lay information before us, and when we call upon the President we usually put into the resolution the phrase "if not incompatible with the public interest;" but the President is not bound at all by a failure to put in that phrase. If he thinks it is incompatible with the public interest, it is his right to so state to the Senate, and the Senate has always bowed to such a suggestion from the Executive. If we call upon the head of any Department, and he thinks it is not proper to send the information, if he goes to the President and the President sustains him in the view that it is not proper to send it, that is the end of it.

Mr. President, I do not expect to have this resolution passed, but I want to say a few words about it, and then I suppose there will be some disposition made of it for the remainder of the session. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] wants to say something about the form of the resolution I should like to have him say it now, and then I shall proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado, in whom I have the profoundest confidence and for whom I have the greatest respect, has alluded to the fact that I had privately suggested to him that I thought the resolution was not in accordance with the practice of the Senate and that its form should be changed.

Mr. TELLER. And I have changed it accordingly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has changed it, doubting whether he ought to do it or not, but putting his action upon a ground that is complimentary, that he does it in deference to my suggestion.

Mr. TELLER. And your superior judgment.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I have no superior judgment. But I am anxious, Mr. President, always that the Senate shall be right in its attitude toward the executive department, as I am anxious always that the Senate shall be right in its attitude toward the House of Representatives, which is the other branch of the legislative department.

I agree entirely with what the Senator from Colorado says: That we are in the habit of passing resolutions directing the heads of all of the Departments except—that is my own qualification of the statement—except the State Department—the Secretary of State—to answer interrogatories and to send to the Senate information indicated in such resolutions. Often I have, where a resolution was in the form "requested," suggested that the word "requested" be stricken out and that the word "directed" be substituted, but I have not known an instance since I have been a member of the Senate in which the Senate has directed the Secretary of State to forward to the Senate copies of diplomatic correspondence, instructions to ministers or to agents appointed by the President to negotiate treaties. It has always been, so far as my memory goes, in form a request to the President to transmit if not, in his judgment, incompatible with the public interest. And there is a reason, Mr. President, for this distinction in the form of directing the Department of State and other Departments. No one will dispute for a moment that the conduct of our foreign affairs is, under the Constitution, entirely in the hands and under the control of the President, and there never has been written a book upon the Constitution—Story, Rawle, Kent, Pomeroy—any book upon the subject which has not emphasized the fact, which is apparent to thoughtful men, that the conduct of our foreign relations, instructions by the President to ministers and other diplomatic agents, require and involve in the interest of the country more or less of secrecy.

The State Department was created early—in 1789—and under the law the Secretary of State, unlike the heads of some of the other Departments, was not required to report to Congress. The law provides that he—shall perform and execute such duties as shall from time to time be enjoined on or intrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeable to the Constitution, relative to correspondences, commissions, or instructions to or with public ministers or consuls from the United States, or to negotiations with public ministers from foreign states or princes, or to memorials or other applications from foreign public ministers or other foreigners, or to such other matters respecting foreign affairs—

Entirely in the hands of the President—

as the President of the United States shall assign to the said Department; and, furthermore, that the said principal officer shall conduct the business of the said Department in such manner as the President of the United States shall from time to time order or instruct.

The other Departments of the Government perform very many duties imposed primarily by Congress, dealing entirely with our domestic affairs, and therefore the distinction which, as I understand, has always been observed, and which I think ought to be observed, between the other Departments of the Government and the Department of State, so far as—and I beg my friend from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to note the limitation which I indicate—so far as it relates to the precise matters which are embraced in his resolution—instructions given to and correspondence with diplomatic agents of the United States, ambassadors, ministers, Senators, if they shall be, improperly, as I think, chosen to negotiate treaties or other pacts with foreign governments.

I agree with the Senator from Colorado that there are some records in the Department of State which are not within the category of purely Presidential, and therefore confidential, archives—commissions, awards that have been made, matters that have been executed, a variety of things; we have drawn the distinction. But as to whether the Senate may properly direct the Secretary of State, who has been rightly called the right hand of the President in conducting the foreign relations of this Government, confided by the Constitution exclusively to him—and of necessity more or less secret—to transmit information relative to them to this body, I think, on reflection and upon examination of the precedents, my friend from Colorado, who has had great experience and whose fidelity in the execution of public duty I always cheerfully confess, will be disposed to agree with me. Mr. President, I made the suggestion which I did to the Senator from Colorado for the reasons I have stated.

The Senator says he does not expect this resolution as amended to pass. For myself I certainly have no objection, as it has been amended, to its passage, and I have not, nor I think has the Senator from Colorado, the slightest thought that the President of the United States will fail to send to the Senate, in response to this respectful and proper request, any paper which he thinks may, without detriment to the public interest—that is for him to decide—be sent to the Senate.

That is all I wanted to say about this matter, and I have said that only because the Senator referred to me as having made a suggestion to him.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have changed the form of the resolution as stated, at the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. My own notion about it is that all resolutions, especially of this character, ought to be addressed to the President, but for convenience of business they are addressed to the head of the Department having control of the subject-matter.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me one word right there, I wish to say the failure to note the distinction to which I wish to call attention has given rise to an attitude in some Departments toward the legislative branch of the Government which I have sometimes thought to be without warrant. The Cabinet is not the mere retinue of the President; the Cabinet, taken as a body, is not merely the official family of the President. We impose duties every day during the session of Congress by law upon Cabinet officers which it is beyond the power of the President by any instruction of his to pretermit obedience to. The Constitution recognizes Cabinet officers. It deals with them or characterizes them as "heads of Departments." It authorizes us—and when I say "us" I mean Congress—to vest in them the appointment of inferior officers; and in the discharge of that function they are as independent of the order or control of the President, theoretically at least, as if they were entirely independent of the President in other respects. The statute books are full of duties imposed and orders made by the Congress to be executed by this member of the Cabinet or that member or the other. But I draw the line only—and my friend from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who has been here many, many years, and who is thoroughly familiar with the traditions of the Senate in this respect will, I think, agree with me—I draw the line purely as to the Secretary of State, so far as his functions relate to diplomatic correspondence and to that domain of duty in which he acts under the Constitution, and can act under the Constitution only by order of the President, and can not act by order of the Congress; and I limit my suggestion to the Senator to that only.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any discussion of this question, except to say that I agree that Cabinet officers are not simply the official family of the President, but they are to perform the duties imposed upon them by law; and a great many duties are imposed upon them specifically. But, Mr. President, it is not in our power here to take away any duty imposed on the President of the United States by the Constitution. So it may be said that every Cabinet officer works subordinately to the President of the United States. An appeal—by custom and usage at least—is allowed from the head of any Department to the President if the President sees fit to entertain it.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to state to the Senator another distinction, if he will permit me, and I will not interrupt him again. Diplomatic correspondence is not a unilateral matter. It embraces instructions to our diplomatic agents; it embraces their conferences with foreign diplomatic agents, and also embraces the correspondence which emanates from other governments, which the President may be, and often is—I do not know but almost universally—in honor bound to maintain confidence in regard to. That establishes the rule, a rule which seems to me to be necessary, for foreign governments would not deal with us if their correspondence is to be published, and our part of the correspondence might only be explicable and be susceptible of thorough understanding if read in conjunction with the various interchanges of correspondence on the subject.

There is nothing that I want to conceal about this business, but I want the Senate to be right about it and to maintain its traditional attitude.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it may be assumed that a Cabinet officer, such as the Secretary of State or the Secretary of any other Department of the Government, when a matter of this kind comes before him, will sit down and consider whether it is a proper thing for him to comply with the request. It might be an entirely proper thing for the Secretary of State to send to the Senate correspondence with one nation and decline to send correspondence with another. If the Cabinet officer has any doubt about it, as I have said, it has been the practice of the Government from time immemorial, in my judgment, not for him to decline to send the information himself, but to submit the question to the Executive. It is no small matter for a Cabinet officer to decline to honor a resolution of one House or of both Houses, and yet he may do that if, in the judgment of the President of the United States, it is incompatible with the public interest that the information should be sent.

Mr. SPOONER. There are cases in which the Senate has agreed hitherto, as to the other Departments of the Government, that when directed they may give a good reason why the Senate ought not to insist upon the direction——

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. But we have not a right to direct as to this diplomatic correspondence. It would place a Cabinet officer and also the President in an unfavorable attitude to decline, because he could not explain his declination without frustrating the purpose of it; and he would be put in the attitude of attempting to conceal something, which he conceals only out of regard for the public interest.

Mr. TELLER. If the President thinks it is incompatible with the public interest to make the correspondence public, he simply says so. He does not go into an explanation why he refuses to send the information; at least, I have never known him to do so. I remember a number of instances since I have been in public life where the President has sent to this body a statement that he did not think it proper to send the information we requested; and, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] suggests to me, we have always accepted such a statement without question. We have been always wise enough not to try to question it. There has been some friction, of course, growing out of some cases, not recently, but the distinction that has been made, I think, has been made more because of the difference in the rank of the President as head of the Cabinet than anything else. I think it has been pretty generally conceded that no Cabinet officer would venture to send to us information as to which there is doubt as to whether or not it should be sent.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will remember that President Washington announced very clearly this doctrine when, in response to a request by the House that he communicate the instructions which he had issued to commissioners who were authorized by Congress, he declined to do it on the ground that it related to foreign affairs, that it was not proper for him to do it, and that neither House had the right to demand it.

Mr. TELLER. I will cut this debate short by saying that in this case, if the resolution had gone to Mr. Hay, and if the President thought it was not proper for him to make a report, that would have been the end of it.

Now, Mr. President, in the expiring hours of this session——

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. TELLER. I am not quite through. I do not care to go into a discussion of anything outside, except to say that I am, as much as any man here, in favor of maintaining the traditions of the Senate. I recognize the distinction between the Secretary of State and the other Cabinet officers, for the reason that he, more than any other officer, deals with questions that demand secrecy, and that he is connected with a Department of the Government which has to deal with very delicate affairs. So I readily accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

As I said, Mr. President, and as I think I am free to say, the Senate is not driven to consider this proposition in great haste. I did say that I did not expect this resolution to pass. I shall be agreeably disappointed if it does. There is another resolution somewhere else, which a newspaper says has been passed. It has not been passed, and it will not be passed, I suppose.

I want to say a word about this resolution not being a question for consideration in executive session. The answer to the resolution may be such an answer as ought to be received in executive session. That is to be determined by the President of the United States, really, or nominally, perhaps, by the head of the Department who sends it in; but this resolution, objected to the other morning by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on the ground that it was an executive matter, ought to go into the public records. For that reason the open Senate is the proper place for its consideration. It is for the officer who sends the information requested to determine in the first instance whether it ought to be sent to us in open session, and it is for the Senate to determine, if it comes here in open session, whether it ought to be considered in open session or whether it ought to go into the secret archives of the Government.

We only call for what the public have been discussing. We call for the instructions. We are told on the one hand that there were no instructions to Commander Dillingham. We are told that our minister down there proceeded to make a treaty on his own account, without any instructions whatever. Possibly that is so, Mr. President; but it is disputed, and disputed by some of the great independent newspapers of the country, disputed by what I call, and I think truthfully, the Republican press. The newspapers have been full of the discussion on this question. I am not going to read them.

A question has been raised as to whether the statement made by the Secretary of State was a correct one. I do not hesitate to say that before we proceed very much further with the discussion of this treaty we ought to know exactly what the condition was when the protocol that is in controversy, or the treaty, or whatever you choose to call it, was made. We ought to know whether the minister who was sent down there, or the commissioner who was sent down there, without any authority from anybody in the world, proceeded to make the most extraordinary treaty that has ever been made in the history of this Government. If some one says that that is a question for discussion in executive session——

Mr. CULLOM. I think it is.

Mr. TELLER. With the treaty here before us and newspaper controversies, I will assure the Senate that I know what the rules of the Senate are, and I will not infringe them by exposing the wonderful secrets that exist behind the locked doors day after day here, which only get out when the newspapers in their enterprise surmise or get hold of some one who tells them what has happened here, and often, as in this case, tells them what did not happen.

Mr. President, as a matter simply of right in the future, I want to challenge the statement made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. He said he would not say, in so many words, whether or not the information published was correct, and yet the Senate certainly got the idea that he was complaining of a misrepresentation. I understand if some one should say that I got up here and said certain things that I did not say, I have an unquestioned right when that charge is made to say "that is not true; I did not say it." I have no right to say what I did say, but I have an unquestioned right to say what I did not say.

Suppose some man should come and say, "Did you not assault the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] in the Senate," or print that statement in a newspaper? I do not think I would stop a great while before I would deny a statement of that kind. He might charge me with an offense which, perhaps, in the eye of the law, would not be any worse than that, but might be just as bad; that is to say, that I had charged the senior Senator from Iowa with some gross misconduct, or something of that kind. Would I not have the right to say that I had not done so? No, Mr. President, you can not stick in the bark in that way. It would be sticking in the bark a good deal if you should say that a man should shut his mouth. What redress would he have? He might come here and get the Senate to pass a resolution that he had not said it; but, in the meantime, the Senate might have adjourned and he might be under the opprobrium of having said something or done something that was very improper.

Mr. President, I will not disclose any of the secrets of the executive session, but I do not think the world would come to an end nor would there have been any great danger of a dissolution of this Government if the public could have looked in here every day we have been discussing this treaty and have listened to all we said; but I do not think they would have been very much edified. I think they might, perhaps, have been amused at some features of the discussion of which I am not able to speak because of the sacredness of the proceedings behind closed doors.

I think it would be a good deal better for us to have an official report of these proceedings than to have the kind of report that has been made for the last thirty years, during which I have been familiar with the Senate. It was just as common twenty-five or thirty years ago as it is to-day; and we have made all sorts of efforts to prevent it. I have seen the members of this Senate summoned to hold up their hands and swear that they had not been guilty of divulging the secrets of the Senate when somebody had divulged them in some way and in our anxiety to prevent the publication of these great secrets of ours, not because they were important, not because the public were being injured by their publication, but because we were here under an obligation not to allow the proceedings in executive session to be disclosed. I have seen an executive officer of this Senate dismissed from that desk there who was not any more guilty, in my judgment—and I said so then—than an angel from heaven. The people afterwards sent him to the House of Representatives, and he has always led an honorable and upright life. It was a very great infliction on him and a great crime, I think, for this Senate when it turned out Mr. Young from the position he occupied here as an executive officer under a bare suspicion, and nothing else, I think.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I only want to say——

Mr. TELLER. Let me say another word. The reports of proceedings in executive sessions went right on. There was no difference in them. I used to think if anything they were a little better after Mr. Young got out than they were before. We are yet in the dark as to how such reports get out, and we always shall be. Mr. President, it is the fault of the system. It is the fault of shutting the doors when there is not any real reason for it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I only wanted to interrupt the Senator long enough to say that while some reports of the proceedings of the executive sessions have been given out occasionally, yet it has seemed to me that the practice has been getting worse of late and that they have been more regularly given out in recent years than they formerly were.

I remember the case of Mr. Young. I remember very well that I never believed the man was guilty at all, and, as the Senator says, we do not yet know who it was who gave out the information that got into the newspapers. But it does seem to me that something will have to be done to protect this Senate when it is in executive session; otherwise we shall have to abandon executive sessions entirely, and sometimes I am inclined to feel that that ought to be done rather than to have these attacks on Senators and false reports of what is going on continually appearing in the newspapers from day to day.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, when we had the Panama treaty under discussion we had the Official Reporters in here; the debate was taken down; and I believe it has been suggested by the Senator from Maryland that there was less publication in the newspapers then than at almost any other time.

Mr. President, I think there are some things in the article which was read entirely foreign to anything that took place here, and I think by those statements injustice is done not only to the Senator from Alabama, but to other Senators. If I heard the article read aright, it would seem there was a sentiment expressed by Senators for the immediate annexation of this island. I recall nothing said yesterday which could be tortured into that, although it may have been said when I was at lunch; but I believe at that time we had a recess, and nothing could have been said. It seems to me the best thing to do would be to open the doors and let the world know on what grounds we act.

I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations if he has any objection to the resolution as amended?

Mr. CULLOM. I think I will move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read as amended, so that it may appear in the RECORD in its amended form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks that his resolution as modified by himself be read.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I will move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to send to the Senate, for use in executive sessions, copies of the instructions given to Commodore Dillingham and Minister Dawson, or either of them, regarding Dominican affairs, and copies of all correspondence and telegrams relating to Dominican affairs, or relating to any proposed agreement, protocol, or treaty between the United States and Santo Domingo, from July 1, 1904, to the 1st of March, 1905.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the resolution is referred, I ask the Senator from Colorado to modify it still further by saying "if, in his judgment, it is not incompatible with the public interest." I do not know of any case where we have asked the President for information without that qualification.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the amendment, but I have said on this floor many and many a time that that clause is not necessary, as the President has that right without our so instructing him.

Mr. ALLISON. I know that the Senator from Colorado has said that, but it is the usual rule to insert the clause.

Mr. TELLER. We do not have to give the President the right to withhold. That right belongs to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TELLER. I think the resolution in its present form is very much better, but if the Senator from Iowa moves to amend it, I shall make no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, that is not a question to be put summarily. Some Senator may wish to speak on the subject.

Mr. LODGE. I rise to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will regard the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa as before the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I believe I was recognized.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the resolution, not at all as to the merits of the case which it involves, but as to passing resolutions of this character. In my short experience here I have never known a demand for documents relating to foreign affairs to be addressed to the Secretary of State. They have always gone to the President under the formula which has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I do not think there can be any doubt that that is the universal practice of the Senate. Nor do I think there is any doubt of the President's right to refuse to send in documents which he may think it incompatible with the public interest to send, whether that phrase occurs in the resolution or does not.

But my objection to this resolution goes to the substance of it. The papers asked for here are papers relating to these negotiations, and the negotiation of treaties under the Constitution is wholly in the hands of the President of the United States. He may appoint such agents as he sees fit. He may conduct the negotiations in such manner as he chooses. That is his undoubted right and function.

It is proposed in the resolution to ask the President to send to the Senate the correspondence with which that negotiation has been carried on. We are asking him to disclose the entire process of the negotiation. We are not merely asking him to send here the papers which have emanated from our State Department. We are asking him to send here the correspondence and the telegrams of a foreign government.

Mr. President, no foreign government would feel willing to negotiate if they knew that at any moment their correspondence was likely to be drawn out by a Senate resolution; and that is the reason, of course, for the undoubted right of the President to refuse. But when we ask him for this correspondence, we are asking him for the correspondence of a foreign government. We are asking him to lay before us the letters written by the officers of that foreign government. That in itself is a good and sufficient reason for not sending correspondence of that sort here. If the President says it is incompatible with the public interest, as he ought to say and as he must say, to send in the papers, I do not want him put in the attitude of concealing something, and I for one do not propose to put the President in that attitude when we are dealing with the affairs of a foreign nation. We have no right to put the President in a false attitude of that kind.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not understand the resolution to call for any papers or communications from any foreign government.

Mr. LODGE. It calls for copies of all correspondence and telegrams relating to Dominican affairs. Correspondence, of course——

Mr. TELLER. Correspondence between our officials. It was never intended to ask for anything more than that.

Mr. CARMACK. Of course not.

Mr. LODGE. In the letters of our representatives in that island are statements as to what the representatives of the other government have said. Their communications, of course, state what was said by the officials in charge of the negotiations on the other side, and the papers relating to the negotiations and the correspondence by which the negotiations were carried on have not, in my time, I think, been asked for. We have asked for a great many papers from the State Department. We have asked the President to send them in. Those requests have been complied with or refused, as the case may be.

Mr. President, I do not suppose there is a thing in all this correspondence which the President or anyone in the State Department desires to conceal; but it sets an extremely bad precedent to demand of the President that he send in correspondence involving a foreign government, which, for that reason alone, ought not to be sent in, and put him in the attitude of desiring to conceal something when he has nothing to conceal, and is simply acting with that good faith toward a foreign government which all international negotiations demand.

When we publish our volume of foreign relations and foreign correspondence there are many papers omitted. There is to-day an immense body of archives in the State Department, perhaps fifty, sixty, or a hundred years old, which have never seen the light and never have been printed; and they have been held back from publication, although all interest in them has ceased, for the very sound public reason that correspondence involving the opinions of a foreign government and of officials of a foreign government ought not to be made public.

That is the objection in my mind, and a fundamental objection, to asking for papers of this sort. They will be refused on that ground. They ought not to be asked for for that very reason, and I trust the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss this matter at all except to say incidentally in passing that I can not see where there is any bad precedent in calling upon the President to send to the Senate, which is a part of the treaty-making power, papers with reference to a treaty. As I said, I do not intend to discuss that question at all, Mr. President. I ask the Secretary to read the paper I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Special to the Washington Post.]

DES MOINES, IOWA, March 15.

Congressman J. A. T. HULL, of this city, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, in a sensational interview, declares that the Japanese are even now planning to insist on possession of the Philippines as soon as convenient after the conclusion of their war with Russia.

"I know whereof I speak," said Congressman HULL. "There is every reason to fear that we will be facing just this situation sooner than any of us are willing to realize. The Japanese feel that they could handle the Philippines better than any other nation. They need the commerce and the business opportunities of the islands, and they feel certain now of their ability to defeat any western nation. They are getting ready to enforce a policy of Asia for Asiatics, and that means expulsion of the United States just as soon as they are free in Manchuria.

"The situation is regarded at Washington as menacing; not immediately so, perhaps, but certain to develop dangerous phases as soon as the present war is over. The United States will have to sell the islands or fight to keep them. If we have to fight it will be at a tremendous disadvantage, owing to our distance. We will be in the same situation that Russia is, and the only thing that will save us from defeat will be to possess a navy that Japan will not dare to fight. For this reason I feel that we can not afford to stop naval development, but rather should accept a plan of expansion based on keeping a greater force in the Pacific than Japan can maintain."

Mr. CARMACK. I put that statement in the RECORD simply because I wish to print it in connection with some remarks I had the honor to make during the recent session of Congress on the naval appropriation bill.

The statement of Mr. HULL as to the attitude and feeling of the Japanese toward our experiment in Asiatic colonization, is corroborative of statements that have been made by American naval officers in eastern waters, who bear testimony to the resentment and jealousy of the Japanese because of our intrusion in Asiatic affairs.

A short time ago western nations regarded Japan with a feeling of patronizing admiration. They were disposed to regard her simply as a pawn upon the international chessboard which might be moved about by the hand of western diplomacy. The tremendous energy and the marvelous military genius displayed by that nation during the present war with Russia have been a revelation to the whole world, and Japan has sprung forward at a bound to occupy a place among the very foremost military powers of the world. When she emerges from her victorious war with Russia she will be blown with pride and ambition and ready to try conclusions with any power in the world. The cry of "Asia for the Asiatics," which Mr. HULL says has been raised by Japan, will have a terrible significance. He tells us that the Administration in Washington—and says that he knows whereof he speaks—looks forward to a probable contest with that powerful nation in order to maintain our foothold in the Philippines, and that the great increase of our Navy, the multiplication of our battle ships, is demanded because it is necessary permanently to maintain in eastern waters a naval force large enough to hold our own with Japan and thereby make good our possession of the most worthless territory upon which any nation ever wasted its treasure or shed the blood of its citizens.

In this connection I wish also to have printed in the RECORD a clipping from the Washington Post of this morning, including a letter from Secretary Taft.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator if that is the interview with the Japanese minister?

Mr. KEAN. No; an article which includes a letter from Secretary Taft.

The article referred to is as follows:

In a letter to John M. Blair, of New York, made public yesterday, Secretary of War Taft says that the policy of the Administration is to retain the Philippine Islands indefinitely, and that it is his belief that self-government for the Filipino people is at least a generation away. The letter was written in response to one from Mr. Blair, which said that the idea had become prevalent that this Government would give the Filipinos self-government in a comparatively short time, judging by remarks made by Secretary Taft when he appeared before the House Committee on Ways and Means several weeks ago. Accordingly investors have shown, in the opinion of Mr. Blair, timidity in putting their money in Philippine ventures. Secretary Taft says also that he believes that when the Filipinos are fitted for governing themselves, in a generation or more, they will be better satisfied with a relation to the United States Government similar to that of Canada and Australia to England, than absolute independence. The text of Secretary Taft's letter is as follows:

MARCH 16, 1905.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of March 7, in which you say that a common reported interpretation of my remarks before the House Committee on Ways and Means is that it is the purpose of the Administration to give independence to the Filipinos within the next four years, and that this produces great timidity about investments in the Philippines, growing, in great part, out of the undercurrent of doubt as to what the future of those islands is to be.

In reply I beg to say that I can not prevent misconstruction of my remarks, except by repeating to you what I actually think in regard to the matter. The policy of the Administration is the indefinite retention of the Philippine Islands for the purpose of developing the prosperity and the self-governing capacity of the Filipino people. The policy rests on the conviction that the people are not now capable of self-government, and will not be for a long period of time; certainly not for a generation, and probably not for a longer time than that, and that until they are ready for self-government it would be a violation of trust for the United States to abandon the islands.

NO DEFINITE POLICY FOR FUTURE.

The question as to the future, however, is one wholly of conjecture. The important fact is the present policy, which is that of the indefinite retention of the islands. What shall be done in the future, when the people have reached a condition where they can be safely trusted with their own government, is a question which will doubtless have to be settled by another generation than the present, both of the American and of the Philippine people, to whose wisdom and generosity we may safely trust the solution of the problem. Should the Philippine people, when fit for self-government, demand independence, I should be strongly in favor of giving it to them, and I have no doubt that the American people of the next generation would be of the same opinion.

I think it much more likely, however, that after the Filipino people shall have been associated with the American people for a generation or more, and shall have tasted the prosperity they will find behind the national tariff wall, they will prefer a relation to America like that of Canada or Australia to England to one of absolute independence.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. H. TAFT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not Mr. HULL gave the interview attributed to him. If he did, I think it is a view which he holds alone, and represents no part of the view held here. But merely that the story may be complete, I ask that the Secretary read the interview of the Japanese minister, published this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JAPAN A GOOD NEIGHBOR—NO DESIGNS ON PHILIPPINES OTHER THAN FRIENDSHIP—MINISTER TAKAHIRA EXPRESSES SURPRISE AT HULL INTERVIEW—AMERICAN CONTROL OF THE ISLANDS AIDS JAPAN.

"Representative HULL, who declares in an interview that the Japanese are now planning to insist on possession of the Philippines as soon as convenient after the conclusion of their war with Russia, evidently has not paid much attention to the policy of Japan heretofore," said Mr. Kogoro Takahira, the Japanese minister, when shown the HULL interview by a representative of the Post yesterday.

"I can not but believe that the gentleman of the American Congress who made the statement must have been misquoted," he continued, "but if it is true, I can not see upon what ground the apprehension that the Japanese will descend upon the Philippines after the conclusion of the war is based. Mr. HULL must think that Japan is drunk with success, and is determined to grasp everything in sight. Is there really any evidence of the intention of Japan to do this? Just now she is engaged in a life-and-death struggle for existence in Manchuria. She will make every sacrifice of life and treasure to carry out that end; but she is not intent upon gaining the possessions of the United States in the Philippines. The possession of the islands by this country is beneficial to Japan and its people. The United States has given an object-lesson to the Orient of a more efficient civilization. We are trying to do our best to teach the Koreans, as well as the Chinese, and we are aided by what has been done by the United States in proving the benefits of the principle of progress. I am surprised to see such a statement given out by an enlightened Representative in Congress.

"It is true that the advent of the United States as the controlling power in the rich possessions of the Philippines is a matter of close interest to Japan. Before 1898 there was little intercourse and trade between the two groups of islands, but since the American occupation it is a notable fact that both have increased considerably. This is gratifying, of course, but what the people of Japan hope for is not only the commercial and industrial development of the Philippines and the consequent mutually prosperous commerce with my country, but also the establishment of a permanent condition of peace and security from disturbance there.

"My opinion regarding the relations which Japan should maintain with the Philippines is very simple—that they should be good neighbors, whose commerce will steadily develop and whose social and political conditions will be progressive and peaceful. Japan has never had any intention of taking advantage of her neighbors or to seek for territorial aggrandizement, but the sincere desire of her Government is to have all neighboring countries realize that mutual interests can best be promoted by the maintenance of peace and the strengthening of the tie of interdependence. I do not mean by this that a race coalition should be formed hostile to the interests of other countries, such as has been typified in the expression 'yellow peril.' Japan wishes other nations to be peaceful and prosperous so that she may be also.

"The United States, with all its power, is now a member of the sisterhood of Eastern nations. Japan welcomes a power whose aims she knows are identical with her own and whose great influence she feels certain will be thrown in the balance for peace and prosperity for all."

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Illinois will not press his motion for a moment. I desire to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we have had a great variety of talk this morning.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think it is due to my colleague in the House, whose interview has been made the basis of discussion here, that the Senator from Illinois should yield.

Mr. SPOONER. Alleged interview.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senators from Iowa feel that they ought to vindicate their colleague in the House, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Iowa, and then I shall have to ask for a vote on my motion.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a point of order. I do not think the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to yield for a moment to any one Senator and then insist upon his motion. The motion to refer is debatable.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course it is. But Senators can debate it here all day in open session.

Mr. MONEY. If Senators wish to speak on it, they have a right to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I certainly do not intend to debate any matter which is alleged to be pending before the Senate, but I think I ought to be permitted to say that in my judgment the interview which has been read, attributed to my colleague in the House, is at least a very doubtful expression of his views or opinions. I base that upon the fact that this same interview appeared in various journals throughout the country, notably the New York Herald of yesterday, and I noticed that the interview was attributed to Mr. HULL, at Sioux City, Iowa, whereas this appears to be attributed to him at Des Moines, Iowa. I have a very distinct conviction——

Mr. CARMACK. The Post merely gives the place from which the story was sent.

Mr. DOLLIVER. It is dated Des Moines, Iowa, and my attention was directed to that from the circumstance that it appeared yesterday in the New York Herald under the date line of Sioux City, Iowa. I doubt very much whether that interview is a correct, or at least an adequate, expression of any views which Mr. HULL has given to the public.

I have a very distinct conviction that, whatever may be the basis of the article, opinions have been attributed to him which he would be very far from avowing. I certainly agree with those who have said that the interview, as relating to our affairs in the Far East, makes a very incorrect and, to my mind, a very grotesque statement of the probable future of our country in its relations with Japan, and I am very glad that the intelligent and clear-sighted interview with the Japanese minister has been placed in the RECORD by the side of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I merely wish to add one word to what my colleague has said. I think I can go further and say that I do not believe the interview in any way is a correct interpretation of the views of the chairman of the Military Committee of the House. But I wish also to add that if he is responsible for such an interview, in my judgment he is practically alone in expressing that view, not only as respects the situation here, but also as affecting the situation in Iowa.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. CARMACK. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that his colleague in the House is not entirely alone in that view if the publication of the statements made by our naval officers in eastern waters is correct as printed a short while ago in the

New York Herald. They said it was the universal opinion of the Japanese that they ought to have the Philippine Islands, and that they resent our intrusion there.

I wish to say, as I do not intend to speak again on this subject, that I think the statement made by the Japanese minister is just the kind of statement to be expected from Japan under the circumstances. It does not mean anything at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not familiar with what our naval officers in the Far East may be saying or what they may believe. I only want to express what I understand to be the opinion of the people of my own State and the public, so far as I know, immediately surrounding it. I do not believe, first, that Captain HULL made this statement. Secondly, I wish to say if he did there are very few people in the State of Iowa who share with him the views which appear in this newspaper article.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw the motion for one moment.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator from Wisconsin really desire that I should withdraw it?

Mr. SPOONER. If I did not really desire that the Senator should withdraw the motion, I would not ask him.

Mr. CULLOM. On the desire expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin, I will withdraw it for one moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois withdraws the motion on the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is correct as to the views of his colleague, the chairman of the Military Committee of the House. If the Senator from Iowa is mistaken about that, I believe he is correct in the proposition that very few people in Iowa or any other State of this Union agree with the views imputed by the newspaper to the chairman of the Military Committee of the House.

We have differed upon the Philippine question. Many Senators on the other side thought the United States ought not to have acquired the Philippines. There was fair ground for difference of opinion, probably, upon that proposition. I think there is no difference between the minority and the majority in this Chamber that we have acquired the Philippine Islands and that to-day the United States is titular sovereign of the Philippine Archipelago. What the people of the United States will choose in the long run to do with the Philippines, what the ultimate policy of the United States will be as to the Philippines, no man now can say. There has been no committal by Congress, and it is a matter entirely, under the Constitution, for Congress to determine as to the ultimate attitude of this country toward the Philippines.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he read the letter in this morning's Post from the Secretary of War on this subject, where he expresses the opinion that we will hold the Philippines indefinitely?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, Mr. President, that is the opinion of the Secretary of War. The Constitution says that "the Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." I myself have never doubted that when the time came that the Filipinos were able to maintain a government of their own, independently, if you please, or under the protection of the United States Government, so far as foreign nations are concerned, and they asked to be permitted to maintain such a government, being fit, there would be no division of party in the United States as to granting them that right. We have made no improvident pledge to handicap this country in the future upon that subject.

This Government is going along, dealing day by day, month by month, and year by year, with the problem as it presents itself in varied phases. But—and this is what I arose to say—however we may have differed about the wisdom of their acquisition, however we may have differed as to the policy which should in the meantime be pursued legislatively as to them, there is one proposition upon which we will not differ, and that is this: There is no government in the world which can take from the United States in the East or in the West any territory which belongs to the United States. Upon that there is and will be but one political party in the United States. Japan has fought with surpassing skill, devotion, and gallantry. Her conduct has been dignified, and I think the suggestion here referred to is an imputation of folly which her minister justly resents and repudiates.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 18, 1905, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 18, 1905.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The President pro tempore (WILLIAM P. FRYE, a Senator from Maine) took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

ASSISTANT CLERKS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] to report a substitute for the resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the salaries of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations (authorized by resolution of February 20, 1900), the assistant clerk of the Committee on Cuban Relations (authorized by resolution of January 28, 1903), and the assistant clerk of the Committee on Public Lands (authorized by resolution of February 24, 1903), paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,200 per annum, are hereby increased to $1,440 per annum each, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the impression that the law provides there shall be no additional salary or compensation paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. This is not an additional salary within the meaning of the statute. It is a reappointment at a different salary, that is all. There are three assistant clerks of committees of the Senate employed at the present time—one as assistant clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, another as assistant clerk of the Committee on Cuban Relations, and another as assistant clerk of the Committee on Public Lands—who each receive $1,200 per annum. This resolution places them on the same basis as all the other assistant clerks, at a compensation of $1,440, making a total increase of $720.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. For the three assistant clerks?

Mr. KEAN. For the three assistant clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was the Senator's attention called to the law? The proviso is as follows:

Provided, That no payment shall be made from said contingent funds as additional salary or compensation to any officer or employee of the Senate or House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. That is very true; but I understand the statute refers to those employed under an appropriation by Congress. This is an appropriation from the contingent fund. These places were created by the Senate, and these assistant clerks are not paid from the General Treasury, but from the contingent fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution reported as a substitute by the Senator from New Jersey?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

JOSE IGNACIO RODRIGUEZ.

Yesterday, while the doors were closed, Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Jose Ignacio Rodriguez, the sum of $66, for the translation from Spanish into English of the constitution of Santo Domingo.

To-day Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN SANTO DOMINGO.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose the regular order is the resolution of inquiry that I offered, and the pending question is on the motion made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. We did not have a vote on that motion yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are two resolutions on the table. One was submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], which precedes the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Then my resolution will be withheld until after the resolution of the Senator from Alabama is considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 8, by Mr. MORGAN——

Mr. GORMAN. That resolution should be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it be laid aside temporarily. The Senator from Alabama is not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be laid aside and the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado, which comes over from a previous day, will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. That resolution has already been offered, and it is now standing on a motion to refer. There have been two amendments made to it, and I should like to have it read as amended. The Senator from Iowa offered an amendment to it.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER on the 15th instant, as amended, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested, if, in his opinion, not incompatible with the public interest, to send to the Senate, for use in executive sessions, copies of the instructions given to Commodore Dillingham and Minister Dawson, or either of them, regarding Dominican affairs, and copies of all correspondence and telegrams relating to Dominican affairs, or relating to any proposed agreement, protocol, or treaty between the United States and Santo Domingo, from July 1, 1904, to the 1st of March, 1905.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that that resolution ought to be satisfactory to everyone in the Senate. I do not suppose that any Senator here expects that we will dispose of the pending treaty at this session of the Senate, and it appears to me that whenever we do come to an examination of it, which must be at the next session of Congress, we ought to come here prepared to discuss it on all the facts which are to be brought before the Senate or which ought to be brought before the Senate. If this resolution is adopted now, we shall have at the incoming of Congress the information we desire.

Mr. President, it has been the custom of the Senate at all times, when resolutions of inquiry of this character were offered, if the form was acceptable, to at least pass them. Now, if any Senator thinks there is anything that ought yet to be added to the resolution to make it acceptable and will make the suggestion, I will agree that the amendment may be made.

Mr. President, in my judgment when the Senate comes to consider a treaty the Senate is entitled to everything that has taken place prior to the sending of the treaty to the Senate. I do not think the President of the United States can, under those circumstances, refrain from sending the correspondence and all the details, because we are as much a part of the treaty-making power as is the Executive. We have the final veto on whatever he may do; we have the power to amend, to change, or to reject as we see fit.

It is an absurdity, Mr. President, to say that the President can have in his possession facts and information which were necessary for him to negotiate the treaty that we can not have before the Senate when we come to consider this question. We do not consider the form of the treaty alone. We consider the propriety of the proposed treaty. We consider whether the American interests will be promoted by it—not only the form, but all the surroundings and its effects are a matter of consideration for the Senate.

Mr. President, if this resolution is not passed now or at some subsequent period there will be a very violent departure from the precedent heretofore made in the Senate. I should like to have some Senator who objects to this inquiry tell me upon what theory we are to be deprived of the information which belongs to us.

I know, Mr. President, all that can be said against opening the archives of the State Department, but will anyone here pretend that any danger is threatened by giving us the information as to what were the instructions to Mr. Dillingham? Will anyone here pretend that we will jeopardize the interests or the foreign relations of this Government with Santo Domingo or any other power? We have been told in the public press all about it. We have been told all about the instructions in the public press, but we do not know whether it is correct or not.

I have heard on the streets that one reason why we should refuse to adopt this resolution of inquiry is that there was great danger some foreign government—and the government has been named as that of Germany—was about to intervene.

Mr. President, in my judgment, and I am responsible for what I say on this subject, from the information I have, I say that is a mere fiction and a myth; that Germany has had no intention at any time of interfering down there in behalf of any German creditors, and, so far as I know, Germany is not complaining of any conduct of this Administration of ours or even of the Santo Domingo country.

I know the Assistant Secretary of State, in his interview given to the public, declared that we had been brought in imminent peril. He said:

> The unfortunate financial condition of Santo Domingo more than once in the last decade has brought to the United States Government questions fraught with imminent peril.

I am a little uncertain whether he meant this Government or Santo Domingo, but assuming that it was Santo Domingo we are entitled to know who is threatening Santo Domingo. If it is we who are brought in peril, then we are certainly entitled to know it.

Mr. President, I do not believe there is any reason why this resolution should not pass. As I said yesterday, I do not suppose it will pass. I am not disposed to unduly press it, and under present conditions, apparent, I think, to the Senate generally, I am not going to call even for a yea-and-nay vote on it. I will not explain why. Senators will understand that without any explanation on my part.

Mr. President, if at the next session of Congress we come here to consider this treaty, that has practically ceased now to be considered before the Senate, we are not going to consider it without the information that belongs to this body under such conditions, and no President will, in my judgment, refuse to send us all the information he has on that subject.

If this was not the last day, or if I did not hope that it was the last day of the session, I should be tempted to say some things concerning the Monroe doctrine. I had supposed until within a few days that an opportunity might be presented. But I shall defer that, Mr. President, until some favorable opportunity, when I shall endeavor to show that the suggestion made in the President's message that the Monroe doctrine requires certain conduct on our part, is sustained neither by precedent nor by the principle of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am prepared to let the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations dispose of the question for the time being. If the resolution goes to the committee to be buried, as I know it will, and I know that is the purpose of the motion, I shall find a way, if I live until the next session of Congress, to renew it in a form that so far as the form is concerned will not be objectionable; and I will put the dominant party in the Senate upon the ground of determining whether we are to have the information or not, or whether it is a mere caprice, or because there is something they want to conceal, which I doubt very much. I believe, Mr. President, it is through mere caprice that the resolution is not allowed to pass at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations are not in the habit of burying anything that ought not to be buried, and sometimes we do not bury things that ought to be buried perhaps.

So far as this resolution is concerned, I shall ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I will assure the Senator from Colorado that at the proper time it will be taken up and considered just as though it were any other question that might be involved in the treaty. I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER. That motion is already pending.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; it is. I had forgotten it.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, if we refer the resolution now to the Committee on Foreign Relations, so far as I am able to judge of the outlook, there will be no opportunity for that committee to consider the resolution or report it at this session and to get it passed by the Senate. The result will be that when we meet here at the regular session of the Senate in December we will be as devoid of information as we are now.

As we stand to-day, Mr. President, the Senate has its head in a complete fog. It was at one time the fashion of the Government to submit great questions, such as we have here, to the Attorney-General. After he had expressed his opinion upon the legal bearings of the case the Secretary of State would often address a letter to the President, in which he laid before him a full scheme of the subject-matter, and when the communication was made to the Senate they had easily accessible to themselves both an exposition of law and a circumstantial relation of the facts upon which they were invited to act.

In this case, Mr. President, we have a brief message from the President. The history of the matter which is involved in the treaty is but imperfectly laid before us.

I contend that when the Senate is invited to act upon a subject-matter it ought to have the fullest information that can be given it officially concerning that subject-matter. It is to be presumed that the Senate desires to act with the highest intelligence that can be applied to a grave concern. It is obvious that the highest intelligence can not be exercised upon a public question unless all reasonable information is supplied and a full account of it given.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday, I think, rather placed, by his method of statement, Senators who advocate some such resolution as this in a false position. He poses us as demanding something of the President. The word "demand" is the word which he applied to characterize this resolution. The resolution is not a demand. If it were a demand, I would not support it. I do not consider that we have the right to demand of the President or of the Departments a statement of the history in their possession. I remember to have seen the incident related that during the Administration of President Jackson there was submitted to him a letter from the French minister in which the words "je demande" were employed. As soon as he saw them he became very much irritated and swore that no response would be made. A felicitous interpreter happening to be near stated that these words in French did not imply what they might seem to do when translated into English, but signified "request," whereupon the President became entirely amenable to the influences of good humor and said there could be no objection in the world to complying with a request so politely stated.

Mr. President, this is a resolution from the only body in this country that can ratify a treaty, and it simply asks for official information respecting that treaty. In a logical sense it would seem to me that it ought to pass of course. Equally, of course, the President preserves in dignity and not in suspicion his right to act upon that request in such a manner as he thinks the best interests require.

But the Senator from Massachusetts says that were the President to convey to the Senate a statement that, according to his judgment, the public interests enjoin upon him not to communicate certain particular information, we would put the President in a false position. That is approaching this subject in a style which, as it seems to me, does not comport either with the dignity of the Senate or with the dignity of the President of the United States. We deal with the subject from different standpoints, but I deny that any Senator deals with it in any fog of suspicion; and I deny that the President of the United States can acquire any fog of suspicion around himself unless it might be gathered indeed by such curious insinuations.

I believe the President of the United States to be an exceedingly manly man, an exceedingly bold man, and a man who does not fear to do anything that he may conclude it is right for him to do. And while I may often differ with him in opinion, I can not attribute to him any such weakness as the apprehension that he will be put in a false position by a respectful request of the Senate to be given such information as they deem fitting to this subject.

Mr. President, we need this information. We can not intelligently sum up this subject-matter without the information. If it be (I have no reason to think that it is) a history made under such conditions that either the judgment of the American people upon it or that of other nations may be feared, the President would not be without precedent if he were to set forth such reasons as actuated him—and they appear to be correct reasons—for withholding such matters as might be of too delicate a nature to impart either to the Senate or to the people of the United States. But why imagine, Mr. President, that such a condition exists, when we have no information that it exists? Why suppose an exceptional condition of affairs, when there is nothing to suggest an exceptional condition of affairs?

Furthermore, Mr. President, whatever may be done about this matter, and whatever has been done about this matter, is sure, in the nature of things, to become public. Publicity is a part of our institutions. It is also a part of the spirit of the age in which we live. No nation and no administration and no great affair which affects the interests of the civilized world can be, in these days, hid away in darkness and in silence. And the best time for publicity to pervade our public concerns is before we deal with them, and not afterwards, for it is only beforehand that minds can be instructed by that publicity, and that opinions may be formed from full possession of facts. In many cases without such information we may only recall the transaction of public business with regret that this or that was not known, and that mistakes might have been avoided.

I regret to see the Senate in the attitude of endeavoring to withhold from itself or from the people of this country full enlightenment upon a great subject-matter in which all of us are so deeply interested, and in which the public are as much interested as any individual could be.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my experience in the Senate has been briefer than that of the Senator from Virginia, but in the course of my twelve years' service here I have taken part in the consideration of many treaties. I have never known a case where the correspondence or the reports of interviews, the process of negotiation by which the treaty was brought into being, had been requested from the President. There was one case in which that correspondence was requested after the treaty had been ratified, and in that case it was sent in in manuscript under the strictest injunctions of secrecy. It was never printed. It was placed in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and any Senator who desired examined it. But that was after the ratification of the treaty.

Now, this rule and practice rest, as it seems to me, on a sound foundation. The Constitution intrusts to the President the sole power of negotiating treaties. In the course of negotiation many notes are interchanged, many interviews are held of which brief reports are made to the Government, and much is done in an informal and unofficial way in order to bring the treaty to pass. In that process of negotiation we are not concerned. We begin to act only when the treaty is sent to us for approval or disapproval.

But if we make these requests, of which this is one of the first instances that I recall, for all the correspondence on which the negotiation is based, we ask the President to send to us not only what our Government has said and written, but inevitably what the other government has said or written, either in the direct form of their letters or in reports of their statements, and that I do not think any President could properly do. It is entirely within our province to ask for information on a definite point, which the President himself is at liberty to give us, but to ask from him all the correspondence on which a treaty is based before we act upon that treaty seems to me a mistaken practice, if it should ever be adopted. My objection to the Senate placing itself in that position is fundamental.

It is perfectly true that the President can refuse to send in papers that he thinks it incompatible with the public interests to send, but if we ask him by a public resolution to send in certain papers on which negotiation is based and he is obliged to refuse, as I believe he would be in proper observance of the comity obtaining between nations, then he is in the position where it would be very easy for persons disposed to be hostile to say that he was keeping back incriminating documents when he was simply doing what good practice and international custom required.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. As I understand the point of the Senator's argument, it is that a great many people would not believe the President made an answer in good faith to this resolution if he declined to send the information.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator misunderstands me completely. I never intimated anything of the sort. I said there were people who would not be slow to charge it, and when party lines are drawn in our foreign affairs it is quite possible that such charges would be made. I do not mean to say that they would be made by Senators who are familiar with the circumstances, but made in the heat of party conflict.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. If the Senator will permit me for a moment, I will say if the President were to send a message to the Senate stating that it was incompatible with the public interest for him to send those papers here, I for one would believe that the statement was made in perfect good faith, and I think it would be so accepted by the Senate. I do not see that there is any point in the Senator's argument, unless he fears that there would be a distrust of the President's truthfulness and good faith in making that reply.

Mr. LODGE. I have no fear, Mr. President, that there would be any distrust of the President's truthfulness either here or among the people at large. I think the opinion of the American people in regard to the truthfulness of the President of the United States has been sufficiently manifested to leave no doubt on that point.

Mr. CARMACK. Then, if the Senator will permit me, why should he fear that such charges would be made if he knows that nobody would believe them?

Mr. LODGE. Because I have known a great many charges made by the party opposed to the President, which I think nobody seriously believed.

Mr. CARMACK. And they did not do any harm.

Mr. LODGE. No; it is quite evident that they did not do any harm.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not the state of public affairs, and has it not been ever since the foundation of the Government the fact that some people are always making charges against everybody? Is it fair for the Senate to consider, in discharging its duties, the fear that somebody might charge something on somebody else?

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senate ought not to make a request on the President which we know beforehand that he is bound, owing to the relations of another government to the question, to refuse to answer in whole or in part. It has never been the practice here; it has never been done.

I do not suppose there is one line in all the negotiations which anybody may not know, but I do think that it would be a most unfortunate precedent for the Senate to adopt the ground that, pending the ratification of a treaty, the President should be asked to send in the papers involving the correspondence and the attitude and the expression of opinion of a foreign government. If it can be applied to one government it can be applied to all. I do not think that this unusual request is a wise or a proper one to make. For that reason I hope the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am quite sure the Senator from Massachusetts, whatever his personal and political friendship for the President may be, does not speak by authority when he seems to me to intimate that the President, if he thought it was incompatible with the public interest to send the documents to the Senate, would be embarrassed in saying that to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think he would be in the least embarrassed to so say. I have never known him to be afraid to say what he thought.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator said there was danger of embarrassing the President and that somebody might criticise him improperly. Why, Mr. President, old George Washington, without any precedent before him, was brave enough, when he thought a paper should not go to Congress, to say so; and I think practically that every President since has been able to say that.

Mr. MORGAN. That was in reference to the other House.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; in reference to the other House, which had called for certain documents. President Washington was brave enough to say that they were not entitled to them; and I think I may say that all the Presidents from that time down have been more or less accustomed to saying that very thing. They have said, "There are certain things that I think ought to be withheld;" and they have withheld them. If the Senator's argument means anything, it means that we must refrain from calling for information for fear there may be something in the Government archives that the executive department does not want to give us, and that the President will be subjected to criticism if he does not do so, although custom has authorized him to say: "It is incompatible with the public interest to comply with your request, and therefore I decline." Mr. President, in my experience in the Senate I have seen that done repeatedly, and I have never in my life known a single criticism of it. I have never heard a Senator who was opposed to the President politically or otherwise raise a question but that it was the exercise of a power which belonged to him, a power which was intrusted to him for the public good. We have never had a President who was not brave enough to say that when such a necessity arose, and we have never had a Senate mean enough to criticise him when he exercised that power.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I do not think that there is any very great importance attached to this resolution whether it should be adopted or not; but it presents a practical question. If we were to instruct the Committee on Foreign Relations or to request the President at once to furnish us the information desired in the resolution, unless we are prepared to remain here for a week or two longer, we should not, perhaps, be able to get it. Therefore I say that the proper thing to do, in my judgment, in view of the probable early adjournment of the session, is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and I hope that will be the action of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this resolution ought to be adopted by the Senate without any hesitancy, I think, in justice to its own reputation. Senators here claim that information is desired relative to the matters that are contained in or sought to be brought out by this resolution. It is very evident that there are questions connected with this resolution that we do not feel at liberty to allude to in open debate; but the minds of Senators evidently have been very much impressed with the necessity of getting from the State Department the correspondence in regard to certain transactions in the island of Santo Domingo; and when we are required to act on treaties, protocols, and things of that sort, and to advise the President—that is what the action of the Senate ought to be; the Constitution says that we are here for the purpose of advising him in the matter of making treaties—we ought to have all the information that bears upon the subject.

I do not agree at all with the proposition stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] on yesterday, that the Senate in its executive session holds any such relation to the President of the United States as to exclude them from any information relating to treaties which would enable them to give him proper advice and give their own consent to this supreme law of the United States which we are enacting here in this Chamber. There is no other part of the legislative power of the United States which is invited in here to assist us in making this supreme law. In ordinary legislation we are very glad to have the assistance of the House of Representatives, and it is absolutely necessary. A legislative department consisting only of one body is not allowable in the United States in conformity with the principles of our constitutional government, except in the single case of advising and consenting to a treaty, which becomes the supreme law of the land whenever we consent to it.

The other party, Mr. President, who is engaged in legislating upon this supreme law of the United States is in this particular case the man Morales, down there in Santo Domingo. Well, sir, if he was elected to the Senate of the United States from a State of this Union, and sent here otherwise duly qualified, this Senate would not receive him; it could not do it out of respect to its own character; it could not possibly receive him upon his personal merits. He is recognized as President in Santo Domingo, owing to the comity of nations and the necessity to preserve commercial and other relations with all foreign countries. The doctrine of international law is that a man who occupies such a position, it makes no difference how he got it, if he is in possession of the government there, may be, and ought to be, recognized by the President of the United States as the de facto President of that country. We do not base the recognition upon his de jure rights at all, but upon his de facto rights.

Now, there he is, and he is participating with this Senate in enacting a supreme law for the United States. Well, the nearest we can get to his views on this question is to ask the President of the United States to send in the correspondence that he has had with him. It is a matter that ought to be looked into. There may be a question of propriety on the part of the Senate in ratifying a treaty with such a man as Morales. The Senate of the United States may refuse to consider it.

For a long time here, under the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States, we ratified treaties with the Indian tribes; that is to say, with the chiefs of the tribes. After a while we came to recognize the absurdity of that, because those men were absolutely incompetent to make treaties, and we knew it. So quietly we withdrew the jurisdiction from the Senate, assumed it in behalf of both Houses of Congress, and undertook to make contracts with the Indian tribes by a sort of programme that we ourselves laid down, whereby we could deal with them on most important matters through the assistance of commissioners and of acts of Congress.

Why did we do that? Simply because those chiefs were not competent to represent their governments, and no one could tell whether a man who was chief to-day had the right to be or would be chief to-morrow. So in recognition of that first principle of treaty making or contract making with independent governments, we have adopted that as the scheme now upon which we shall deal with the Indians.

Now, look at Morales—and I might include several other chieftains who are presiding now in the office of presidency of those republics—look at them. What are they? Who are they? What rights have they got? How can we invite them to come in here to participate with us in making the supreme law of the United States? This treaty when ratified, if it should be ratified, becomes a law that breaks down any State constitution, any State law; and I believe it would break down any law of the United States that is in conflict with it.

That is the ground we took here when we were arguing the Panama question, the question of government there, etc., and the treaty with Panama. If there were any laws in the way of a treaty made with Panama, they would give way; they would be repealed by the power and effect of the treaty. So in this case, if there is any part of the law of the United States, such as the collection of the customs of the United States, the rate of taxation, the occupancy of their ports and custom-houses by our agents, and the like of that, this treaty, Mr. President, breaks down the laws of the United States, and it breaks down the Constitution of the United States, in my humble opinion. But at all events there is no law which we touch or have touched in a long time that has the importance that must be attached to the laws that are provided in this treaty to be enacted as the supreme law of the United States.

Mr. President, in order to understand what we ought to do in the island of Santo Domingo and what we ought to do in respect of the people of that country, the President has assumed and exercised the right, and we have the right in concert with him—in correspondence with him—to know those same things, so that we may come to a judgment as to whether we will consent to the enactment of this law—for that is what we are doing, enacting a law.

It is not true that the President has a right to withhold information on the subject of a treaty—I will confine my remarks to that—from the Senate upon the proposition, stated by the Senator from Massachusetts on yesterday, that there are matters connected with the negotiation of treaties that we are compelled to keep in the archives of the State Department and in the bosom of the President and the Secretary of State, for the reason that other nations would not treat freely with us if they thought that their pour parlers and various other efforts to get at an agreement were to be investigated by the Senate.

Let us see what that amounts to. That depends upon whether or not these state secrets—for they are state secrets—are as much protected against exposure when communicated to the Senate as they are when communicated to the President. As a matter of practice, Mr. President, neither body can avoid exposure. The editors of proceedings in executive sessions are here to expose what we say, and a great deal of what we do not say, to the world; but the world is charitable enough to put them down as falsifiers and give us the benefit of the doubt. That is about the situation here. When we go down to the streets and find that horde of enterprising, enlightened, and intelligent reporters around the Department of State and around the Executive Office, so that a man can hardly break through them to get in or out—certainly he can not do it without being interrupted in his business—what are they doing there? They are picking up information from the President and from his men around him and from the State Department and other Departments, but more particularly from the President and the State Department, which they go and circulate to the world. There is a freedom of giving out such information there which I think must surprise other nations as to the liberality and democracy of our institutions, because nothing is sent here, or very little is sent here, under the confidence of our rules that does not appear next morning in the public papers as having been given out.

We find statements, statements, statements made by the Secretary of State and the Assistant Secretary of State and "published by authority," it is said, in the important, influential, and reputable newspapers, that are not communicated here. When the Senate gets hold of these facts in this indirect way and we offer a resolution here to bring out the actual facts, Senators rise and object that we are not worthy of confidence; that we must advise the President without being informed of what the facts are. He has advised himself as to the signing and sending here of a treaty upon a state of facts—of course he could not do it otherwise—but when it comes to the question of whether a coordinate branch of the Government, the Senate, shall also advise him, we are left in the dark, and he refuses to show us the papers, we will say, upon which he took his course of action and made his recommendation. We have to vote the law of the land in the absence of the facts that the President has acted upon, and he and his friends stand around him and say: "No, it would be impolite; it would be perhaps dangerous for the President of the United States to send in his message here stating the facts upon which he acted in negotiating the treaty lest you might give them out to the world." As a matter of fact, I think the Senate can very well afford to compare notes with the executive department on the question of retailing to the world facts that ought to be kept sacred in that department. I think so, and the people think so, and they think rightly about it.

This resolution ought not to be opposed. The Senate ought not to humiliate itself and ought not to place upon itself the brand that it is worthy to be treated in the way we are treated when the President refuses or withholds or fails to send in information that we need here. We believe we need it, and we know we need it, in order to get at the facts of the transaction and base a sound judgment and consent under the Constitution and our oaths upon a proposition to ratify the treaty.

We ought not to put that brand upon ourselves, but that is what we are doing. We are announcing to the world that the President of the United States must not be invited by this body to send to it the papers that relate to the correspondence out of which the treaty originated because we are not fit to be trusted with it; and yet it is asserted here, and admitted on all sides, that the President, for reasons of his own, may, after all, decline the request, because he is under some peculiar personal obligation or Presidential obligation not to furnish the particular facts. He has a right to decline the request without any impeachment of his motives. We do not impeach his motives whenever he makes such a reservation and refuses to send the information desired. That is supposed to be and asserted to be the prerogative of the President and necessary for the safety of the public.

So the Senate makes no complaint when this information is withheld; but let the President take that ground, not that he is not compelled to communicate to the Senate the facts in reference to the negotiation of the treaty, but that there are certain facts within his keeping in the particular case which he may withhold for reasons best known to himself. Then the Senate would yield at once and would not pass under the ban and suspicion inflicted by themselves upon their own trustworthiness.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, who has had great experience and has most extensive knowledge in regard to questions of this character, whether in connection with the negotiation of treaties by this Government there has been a single instance in the whole history of the Government up to within the last ten years where there has been raised the slightest question as to the adoption of such a resolution or where there has been a refusal on the part of the President of the United States to communicate to the Senate when it is considering a treaty all the correspondence in relation thereto?

Mr. MORGAN. Never, Mr. President, within my knowledge or information, in regard to a treaty. In regard to public appointments to office the Cleveland Administration took a ground which I think is entirely untenable. I think we did ourselves very great injustice in not requiring Mr. Cleveland to bring forward the reasons for removal of men from office. Citizens of the United States have a right, when they are driven from office, to know, and to have their Senators and Representatives know, what grounds there are for their removal. Whatever the grounds are they ought to be stated. That was a bad rule; it was a bad break we made in the wrong direction when we applied it to appointments to office, but, so far as I am informed, we have never applied that rule to treaties, and I do not think any Senator here can cite an instance in which it has been done.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I should like to call his attention, in view of what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said about this matter in the consideration of the pending treaty, that when General Grant was President of the United States he negotiated a treaty for the acquisition of this island of Santo Domingo, and, without the passage of a resolution by the Senate, he furnished to the then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, Hon. Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, all the correspondence, and on the 24th day of March, 1870, Mr. Sumner presented it to the Senate. It is set out in the Executive Journal, as follows:

> Mr. Sumner presented a letter of the Secretary of State, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, communicating copies of the instructions under which the convention and treaty of the United States and Santo Domingo were negotiated, together with the accompaniments therein referred to; which was ordered to be printed in confidence for the use of the Senate.

So in looking back, as I had cause to do some year or two ago, I found that in almost every case the Department furnished voluntarily all the correspondence which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says ought not to be presented at any time, and in no case in the history of the body where the resotion was couched in proper language was it ever refused to pass a resolution asking for such information.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am not very familiar with that particular incident, although I knew it in a historical way; but that was a case where a brave and honest President squared his action with his sense of duty. His idea was that the Senate of the United States, in acting upon what was then a very difficult problem relating to this same island, ought to be informed of everything that had been done and said in that transaction. When we have such Presidents, we have no occasion to be making requests through resolutions that we be informed of this, that, and the other thing connected with it. It is the absence of such Presidents. I think, Mr. President, that has forced us into this unpleasant duty of asking for information by resolution that ought to come voluntarily. It is a part of the duty of the President to communicate it to us, so that we can know what he acted upon and whether to advise him that his action was correct or incorrect and inform him, if we can, where he overlooked some point.

Look at the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty; how it was argued and discussed here, how every fact in regard to the whole subject was brought forward by President McKinley, and how the Senate disagreed with that great and splendid man in the wording of that treaty and amended it, knowing at the time they amended it that it would fail, because Great Britain would not accept the construction that the United States Senate put upon it. The fact that the Senate took that action on that occasion has saved this Government from an involvement about which we would have been worrying to-day very seriously.

I hope the Senate will pass this resolution and let us go on and attend to this business as we ought to, because some of us, at least, are not satisfied that we have got the information that is necessary.

There is one paper connected with this business—and I will not designate it—which seems to have taken effect and produced very important results in Santo Domingo, without anybody being able to trace its origin or knowing whether it originated here or whether it originated in Santo Domingo, or who prepared it or drew it up, or under what instructions, if any, that agreement was made. We knew nothing about it. It is a matter of serious dispute all around as to where that paper comes from and by whose authority that contract was entered into.

Well, I suppose the general purpose of this resolution is to get at the history of that paper; to find out in some way, if we can, who originated it, where it was first made, and by what authority it was ever formulated into a contract between this Government and the Government of Santo Domingo. We do not know anything about it, and here we are lingering along, not even considering the amendments to this treaty nor taking a single vote upon anything at all, in our effort to get information. It is an honest effort, and I hope it will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I thought that before he moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business he would permit action to be taken upon the resolution which I offered yesterday, to which he objected, and which came up this morning.

Mr. CULLOM. I think we had better get along with executive matters.

Mr. MORGAN. I know the Senator thinks we had better get along, but I have an opinion of my own as to what ought to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois insist upon his motion

Mr. CULLOM. I think I shall have to insist upon it.

EXTENSION OF PATENTS IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from Illinois will yield to me for a moment, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the printing of a document.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent for the printing, as a document, of an argument regarding legislation for the extension of letters patent. The expense, I believe, will be less than $500. It is now under consideration by the American Bar Association, and it is claimed that the argument which I ask to have printed contains valuable information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. KEAN. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To print as a Senate document the paper to which the Senator from Nevada has referred.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. What is the nature of the paper?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It relates to patent matters.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It relates to legislation for the extension of patents in proper cases beyond the term of the original grant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the paper referred to by the Senator from Nevada will be printed as a document. The Chair hears no objection.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. During the executive session several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries. After two hours and twenty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

While the doors were closed, at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m., Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee to consist of two Senators be appointed by the Chair to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn without day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CULLOM and Mr. MCCREARY as the committee.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

At 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. Mr. CULLOM and Mr. MCCREARY, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared, and

Mr. CULLOM said: Mr. President, the committee who were directed by the Senate to inform the President that if he should have no further communication to make the Senate is ready to adjourn, have discharged that duty, and were requested by the President to inform the Senate that he has no further communication to make.

At 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m. the Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn without day.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the President pro tempore declared the Senate adjourned without day.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 4, 1905.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Vice-President (Mr. CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS) called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, offered the following prayer:

And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven;

And he said, Lord God of Israel, there is no God like Thee in heaven above or on the earth beneath, who keepest covenant and mercy with Thy servants that walk before Thee with all their hearts;

And now, O God of Israel, let Thy word, I pray Thee, be verified, which Thou speakest unto Thy servant. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold the heaven and heaven of heavens can not contain Thee.

Yet have Thou respect unto the prayer of Thy servant, O Lord my God, that Thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which Thou hast said "My name shall be there," that Thou mayest hearken unto the prayers which Thy servants shall make toward this place, and hearken Thou to the supplication of Thy servant and of Thy people when they shall pray, and hear Thou in heaven Thy dwelling place, and when Thou hearest, forgive.

What prayer and supplication which shall be made by any man or by all Thy people hear Thou in heaven, Thy dwelling place, and forgive and do and give to every man according to his ways, whose heart Thou knowest, for Thou knowest the hearts of all the children of men.

Let us pray. Father Almighty, Lord of heaven and earth, we thank Thee for everything and we ask Thee for everything. We thank Thee for these days and months since we parted; for health, for light, for air, for breath, for wisdom, for everything that Thou hast been pleased to give Thy servants.

And now we are before Thee in prayer for the work of this Congress in the months that are before us. Thou hast been pleased to send Thy servants to this service. Thy kingdom is to come and Thy will is to be done on earth as it is done in heaven. And here are all these ministers of Thine, apostles of Thine, sent by Thee to go forward to bring in this kingdom. They have to hew down the mountains and to lift up the valleys. They have to make the waters flow and the deserts blossom. And they are here to pledge themselves to Thee, the living God, our Father, with us always—strength for Thy commandments; strength for each of Thy servants here; wisdom, Thy perfect wisdom, for whatever they may have to decide and whatever they may do, and the love of justice, truth, and peace in every heart before Thee.

Father, we thank Thee for so much! For peace among the nations; that Thou hast sheathed the sword and that men need study war no more; for concord, the blessing and prosperity of this happy nation, whose God is the Lord; that men bear each others burdens; that they go forward as brethren, each with each and each with all.

And so be with us in these days that are to come. Light, love, and strength, Father; we ask everything of Thy perfect love, as Thy children in the Lord Jesus.

Join me, all, audibly in the Lord's prayer.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 4, 1905.

This day, in compliance with the provisions of the Constitution, the Members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress assembled in their Hall and were called to order by Mr. ALEXANDER MCDOWELL, the Clerk of the last House.

The CLERK. Prayer will be offered by the Chaplain of the last House.

The following prayer was offered by the Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., Chaplain of the last House.

Infinite and eternal Spirit, Father of all souls and the giver of all gifts, humbly and devoutly we bow before Thee and ackowledge with gratitude our indebtedness to Thee for all that we are and all that we can hope to be as individuals and as a nation.

From weakness to power, from small to great, from insignificance to a world-wide influence Thou hast led us onward and upward as a nation, and we would not forget that "to whom much is given of him much will be required," "that righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

Forgive, we beseech Thee, our individual and national sins and cleanse us from all iniquity, that with pure motives, high resolves, and noble endeavors we may move forward to yet greater achievements.

Here in Thy sight, under the dome of this great Capitol, we are gathered together, the Senators and Representatives of eighty millions of people, who have committed to their care the interests and welfare of the nation. Grant, O most merciful Father, that with clear conceptions, lofty ideals, and patriotic zeal they may fulfill to the uttermost the obligations resting upon them. Impart unto the Speaker of this House strength and wisdom, that he may guide this body through all its deliberations to the highest and best results.

Be graciously near to the President of these United States, his advisers, and all others in authority, that with unanimity of purpose, guided by the light of heaven, the laws of the land may be faithfully executed and the affairs of state wisely and amicably administered to the uplift of the people and to the honor and glory of Thy holy name.

We thank Thee for the peace and prosperity which prevails throughout our borders and that we are at peace with all the world, and we most fervently pray that these conditions may continue so long as the Republic shall live, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, who taught us, when we pray, to say:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The CLERK. Three hundred and sixty-nine Members have answered to their names; a quorum of the Fifty-ninth Congress is present.

CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP.

The Clerk presented for the information of the House a statement showing the changes that have occurred since the regular election of Members of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The statement is as follows:

First Nebraska	Elmer J. Burkett[a]	Mar. 4,1905	Ernest M. Pollard.
First Indiana	James A. Hemenway.[a]	....do....	John H. Foster.
Second West Virginia	Alston G. Dayton[a]	Mar. 17,1905	Thos. B. Davis.
Eighth Texas	John M. Pinckney.[b]	Apr. 24,1905	John M. Moore.
Third Connecticut	Frank B. Brandegee.[a]	May 9,1905	Edwin W. Higgins.
Fourteenth Illinois	Benjamin F. Marsh.[b]	June 3,1905	James McKinney.

[a] Resigned. [b] Died.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the name of my colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] be placed on the roll. The certificate has evidently been lost. There is no contest in the case and no opposition.

Mr. PAYNE. That would not be in order until after the organization of the House.

The CLERK. It would be a matter of unanimous consent. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the name of his colleague [Mr. MARSHALL] be added to the roll. Is there any objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. At this stage of the proceedings I shall object. At the proper time that will be in order.

The CLERK. Nominations for Speaker are now in order.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

Mr. HEPBURN. I present the name of Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, a Representative-elect from the State of Illinois, as a candidate for Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I nominate for Speaker a Representative-elect from the State of Mississippi, Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The CLERK. Are there any other nominations? No others are heard. The following tellers will please take their places at the desk: Mr. DENBY of Michigan, Mr. WEBB of North Carolina, Mr. DICKSON of Illinois, and Mr. BEALL of Texas. The Clerk will call the roll, and Members will answer for whom they wish to vote as their names are called.

The question was taken; and there were—for Mr. CANNON, 243 votes; for Mr. WILLIAMS, 128 votes; not voting 15, as follows:

For Mr. Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois—243.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. CASTOR] is detained at home by illness.

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. The result is, for Speaker, Mr. CANNON has received 243 votes, Mr. WILLIAMS 128. Mr. CANNON, having received a majority of the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the Fifty-ninth Congress. [Applause.] The Clerk appoints Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi, Mr. KEIFER of Ohio, Mr. VREELAND of New York, and Mr. UNDERWOOD of Alabama, a committee to escort the Speaker to his place. [Prolonged applause.]

(When Mr. CANNON appeared with the Members designated, the Members of the House, rising in a body, greeted him with loud and general applause, which was renewed as he ascended to the chair.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Gentlemen, I have the honor of introducing to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, who will be, and who deserves to be, its Speaker. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. I thank you for the honor you have conferred upon me, particularly as I may be able to consider your action as an indorsement of my services as Speaker of the last Congress. We are here as representatives of the people. This House is the only place where the voice of the majority of the people, without intervening machinery, may directly express itself. [Applause.] Therefore our responsibility, being more direct, is the greater. As your Speaker I shall endeavor to preside over your deliberations with fairness to both parties, and to every individual Member. When I have done that, I may claim to have fairly fulfilled the duties of Speaker under the legislative law.

There is, however, a duty for the whole membership of this House as well as for the Speaker. The House is powerless without a quorum, and the public business will move slowly and unfortunately if Members are absent from the sessions of the House or from the sessions of the committees. Therefore I ask of you not only charity for and patience with my own shortcomings as the presiding officer, but also prompt attendance and diligence on your part, which alone can make our coming session advantageous to the country. [Applause.]

SWEARING IN OF THE SPEAKER.

Mr. BINGHAM, the Member longest in continuous service in the House, was named by the Clerk to administer the oath of office to the Speaker-elect, and the oath was accordingly administered.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS AND DELEGATES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll by States and Territories; and Members and Delegates, as their names are called, will please come forward to the area in front of the Clerk's desk and take the prescribed oath of office.

The SPEAKER then administered the oath of office to the Members and Delegates presenting themselves.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania and Mr. COCKS qualified by affirmation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the name of my colleague, Mr. Marshall, be added to the roll, the certificate of his election having been lost.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota requests unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. Marshall, from that State, may take the oath of office, his credentials not having arrived.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Pending the request I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any question or contest concerning the election.

Mr. GRONNA. No, sir; no contest or question whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Thereupon Mr. Marshall appeared at the bar and took the oath of office.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

Mr. HEPBURN submitted a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Alexander McDowell, of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, chosen Clerk of the House of Representatives;

That Henry Casson, of the State of Wisconsin, be, and he is hereby, chosen Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives;

That Frank B. Lyon, of the State of New York, be, and he is hereby, chosen Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives;

That Joseph C. McElroy, of the State of Ohio, be, and he is hereby, chosen Postmaster of the House of Representatives;

That Henry N. Couden, of the State of Michigan, be, and he is hereby, chosen Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer as a substitute for the resolution just submitted the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That W. S. Cowherd, of Missouri, be elected Clerk of the House of Representatives; that Charles A. Edwards, of Texas, be elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives; that J. R. Taylor, of Arkansas, be elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; that Robert L. Douglass, of South Carolina, be elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives; that Austin Crouch, of Alabama, be elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The question being taken, the substitute offered by Mr. HENRY of Texas was rejected.

The resolution of Mr. HEPBURN was then adopted.

The officers mentioned in the above resolution came to the bar of the House and the oath of office was administered to them by the Speaker.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to inform the President of the United States that the House of Representatives has elected JOSEPH G. CANNON, a Representative from the State of Illinois, as Speaker, and Alexander McDowell, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, as Clerk of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE OF NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate to inform that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that JOSEPH G. CANNON, a Representative from the State of Illinois, has been elected Speaker; that Alexander McDowell, a citizen of the State of Pennsylvania, has been elected Clerk, and that the House is ready for business.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate has passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Also:

Resolved, That a committee, consisting of two Senators, be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

And that, in compliance with the foregoing, the Vice-President had appointed as said committee Mr. ALLISON and Mr. MORGAN.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate, with deep regret, has listened to the announcement of the death of the Hon. ORVILLE HITCHCOCK PLATT, for more than a quarter of a century a member of this body, a period marked by five consecutive elections, as a Senator from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as such committee on the part of the House Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota, Mr. LITTAUER, and Mr. WILLIAMS.

THE RULES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress be adopted as the rules of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress, including the standing orders of March 8 and March 14, 1900 (relating to the consideration of pension and claim bills on Fridays), which are hereby continued in force during the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to offer an amendment to that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman desire time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to offer an amendment to the resolution just reported.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield for that purpose. I will yield to the gentleman any reasonable amount of time for the purpose of debate, but not otherwise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman propose to exhaust his time? Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Have I not a right when the gentleman is through to offer an amendment to the pending resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor and is entitled to the floor. Whether the gentleman from Mississippi will have the right to offer an amendment will depend upon the action of the House; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has invoked the opinion of the House in the premises.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls for the previous question before he sits down, then I shall have no opportunity to offer an amendment at all.

The SPEAKER. Not if the House sustains the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me a moment for the purpose of making a few innocuous observations.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in arising, which will remain a purpose unaccomplished, was to get the opportunity of offering an amendment to the resolution—the amendment providing that the rules of the Fifty-eighth Congress should be adopted "for not longer than thirty days." The object which I had in view in offering that amendment was to secure to the House of so-called Representatives of the American people an opportunity to adopt its own rules by amending in a manner satisfactory to itself the rules of the last House. I hope the membership of the House understands that the only door whereby I can make an entrance in order to offer that amendment is that made by voting down the demand for the previous question, which in due time will be made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there have been from time immemorial almost "blanket Indians" upon the majority side—people who were dissatisfied with the rules. A majority even of the majority sometimes is frequently dissatisfied with the rules so adopted in this body as to cut them off from all right to propose amendments even; they—some of them—know that these rules have been adopted not so much for the purpose of manacling the minority party in the Chamber as for the purpose of manacling the minority of the majority on that side of the Chamber. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, those of you who are in earnest about wanting to get an opportunity for an expression of the views of the American people's Representatives during this Congress will vote "No!" when the gentleman from Pennsylvania calls the previous question, or attempts to call it, and those of you who are willing in advance to be manacled, and especially the kids in the House who afterwards will have no views whatsoever, have at least had your eyes opened by the public announcement I have just made. If you will vote down the previous question and give an opportunity to adopt the amendment of which I have spoken, then at the end of thirty days the majority of this Chamber—the Republicans in this Chamber—will have an opportunity to vote such rules as they think just and fair, not only to the minority party (and from the majority we expect but little consideration), but to themselves and to the country.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute; I have just a few moments.

Mr. OLMSTED. We will give you more time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there is a great difference of opinion growing up in the ranks of the Republican party. [Applause on Democratic side.] The La Follette idea, the Cummins idea, the new Massachusetts free-raw-material idea, all sorts of new stand-pat ideas come in upon us on the breezes from the West and from the Northeast, all of them from people pretending at any rate to want to revise the present exorbitant tariff schedules, to do something for the extension of foreign markets for the American farmer and manufacturer, to do something in behalf of freer, broader reciprocal trade relations with the nations of the earth. Right here at the threshold I tell you if you adopt this resolution when you adopt the previous question upon it you have adopted rules that will render you just as helpless as a bird trying to fly in an asphalt lake. Now I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to ask the gentleman from Mississippi in what important particular the manacles in operation during the last Congress, and which we are about to put in operation during the present Congress, differ from the manacles imposed by the party to which the gentleman from Mississippi belongs during the last Congress in which it was in the majority.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying of the logicians that the poorest thing that pretends to be an argument and is not is an "et tu quoque." [Laughter.] It may have been true that at some time in the past when we were the majority party we wanted to keep down our minority in our party, and it is true to-day that you want to do it, but there never was a time when any Democratic House was ever run by precisely these rules, nor if it had been would it be a justification of them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHARTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will extend my time so as to enable me to answer it.

Mr. DALZELL. I will extend the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just sufficient time to answer the question.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield one minute.

Mr. WHARTON. The gentleman from Mississippi used an expression in his remarks concerning the "kids" in the House. I would like to have him explain that expression of "kids" in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, with that degree of reverence which the personal appearance of my interrogator excites in my mind [laughter and applause] I should say that he is perhaps the last person in the House who ought to ask the question. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we all learned through the medium of the public press that at the Democratic caucus the gentleman from Mississippi was given power and directed to speak for the minority. Where he gets any authority to speak for the minority of the majority I do not know. I recognize his right, however, when he undertakes to speak for those who are in favor of tariff revision. Now, these rules have been the rules of the House of Representatives ever since the Fifty-first Congress. They were the rules of the Fifty-second Congress—a Democratic Congress, presided over by Speaker Crisp. They were the rules of the Fifty-third Congress, presided over by a Democratic Speaker. The gentleman says not exactly the same rules, but they are substantially the same rules. The difference amounted to nothing at all, and I confess to some surprise that any objection is made on the part of the gentleman from Mississippi when I refer to what took place at the meeting of the Fifty-eighth Congress, when, without objection or protest on the part of the gentleman from Mississippi or anyone on that side of the House, the rules were adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps, in explanation of the fact we did not protest at that time, I might say that we were expecting a stalwart and strenuous protest to come from a Republican Member whom I now have in my eye. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whom the gentleman is to whom the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] refers. [Laughter.] But I would suggest to him that our friends upon the other side of the House—and I do not mean to be cruel—are in a less fortunate position, perhaps, as to entering protest now than they were at the meeting of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker; and in order to save time we will just have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 228, nays 126, not voting 31, as follows:

YEAS—228.

SWEARING IN A MEMBER.

After the first call of the roll:

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson] present, and does the gentleman desire to take the oath of office?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes, sir; I desire to be sworn in and take the oath.

Mr. Burleson appeared at the bar and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the names of those not answering upon the first roll call.

The call of the roll was completed as above recorded.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my name was not called. I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman paying attention when his name should have been called, and failed to hear it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee was called, and he voted "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

DAILY HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the daily hour of meeting of the House of Representatives shall be 12 o'clock meridian.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

DIGEST AND MANUAL.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies of the Digest and Manual of the Rules and Practice of the House of Representatives for the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, the same to be bound and distributed under the direction of the Speaker and Clerk of the House.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

SPECIAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John T. Chancy be continued in the services of the House in his present position during the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the Fifty-ninth Congress, and until the organization of the Sixtieth Congress, Isaac R. Hill be authorized to act as special employee of the House of Representatives and receive compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum; that Felton B. Knight and Joseph J. Sinnott be authorized to act as special messengers of the House of Representatives, each to receive compensation at the rate of $1,200 per annum, and that James F. English be authorized to act as special chief page of the House of Representatives at the rate of $900 per annum, and $500 additional for services as pair clerk.

Said officers shall at all times be under the direction and control of the Speaker of the House, and they shall be subject to removal by him for cause at any time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas if this is the usual resolution?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is the usual resolution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it the same number of employees that they had last year?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It is the same number, and the same salaries as they had last session.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates of the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule

XXXII, and when names of Members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called, that seats be selected by their colleagues: And provided, That in selecting seats the precedents of the Fifty-second and Fifty-fourth Congresses be followed, whereby the section of seats next the main aisle on the minority side were given to the majority side, leaving any further excess of majority Members to be accommodated in the seats on the extreme left of the minority side.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, just one word in explanation of the effect of this resolution. Upon its adoption this section of seats on my left, on the other side of the aisle, would be selected by Republicans as their names are called, and then the excess of Republicans would have to select their seats in the last row on the extreme left of the Hall, commonly known as the "Cherokee Strip." That will seat twenty-one. This section to my left will seat thirty-five. That will leave the minority the three middle sections between the last section on the left of the Hall and the one on my left, and these three sections will furnish enough seats, and more than enough, to seat all the minority Members. I would say that this division of the seats was made first in the Fifty-second Congress and again in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when the majority was nearly as large as it is at the present time on the majority side of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Minnesota is mistaken in one respect. The majorities in those Congresses were not nearly as large as the majority in this one, but very much larger.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the Fifty-fourth Congress the Republicans had 134 majority in the House, whose membership was 357. In that House the Democrats numbered 104, Republicans 245, and Populists 7. The Republicans had a majority over the Democrats of 141 and over all told of 134. In the Fifty-second Congress, with a membership of only 333, the Republicans had only 88 Members, while the Democrats had 231 and the Populists had 14, so that the Democrats had a majority over the Republicans of 153, and over all of 14 less than that, or 139.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Democracy will always remain of an equal mind upon the question of never administering to anyone else a dose which it is not prepared in its turn to take. I find after examining the precedents—and I will frankly say that I was very much disappointed when, after examination, I found them so—that in the Fifty-second Congress we did take the seats up to that aisle, the first one beyond the middle aisle. We took them upon the principle of keeping the majority as nearly as possible together in a compact body, and the minority as nearly as possible together in a compact body; and although our majority then was not only absolutely larger but very much larger in percentage, because of the comparative smallness of the membership at that time, yet it is a precedent which we ourselves have set. It was done in the Fifty-second Congress by unanimous consent, and again in the Fifty-fourth Congress, when, by unanimous consent, the Republicans took the seats up to the first aisle of the left of the center aisle, their majority then being 134.

I had contemplated making objection to unanimous consent, but under the circumstances, all the precedents considered, I think it fair not to do so, and shall not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the resolution provide for the colleagues of absent Members drawing their seats?

Mr. TAWNEY. It does.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood it to apply only to absence on account of sickness.

Mr. TAWNEY. Absence for any cause.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does it read that way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have that part of the resolution read once more, or the provision for drawing seats for absent Members.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the adoption of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Minnesota allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask him if the latter portion of the resolution is not contrary to all precedents up to this time? In other words, does not his resolution direct on which side of the Chamber a Member shall take his seat, and has it not heretofore been allowed that a Member might take his seat where he desired, merely agreeing by unanimous consent which portion of the House belonged to the Republicans and which to the Democrats?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that the latter part of the resolution has heretofore been agreed to by unanimous consent, and we ask now to agree to consideration of the entire resolution by unanimous consent, and if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] fears the effect of that precedent, I have no objection to withdrawing that part of the resolution and asking that the division of seats on the floor be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to say to the gentleman that for a hundred years this House has assembled and agreed on the seats which the Members should occupy without anything being forced down the throat of the minority by a vote of the majority. I am sure that the minority are willing to do what is courteous and proper under the circumstances, and I do not think the gentleman should set a precedent by saying, "By a vote of this House we will force you to take your seats where we direct you."

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that be the meaning of the resolution, I have certainly misunderstood it. I understand that the gentleman from Minnesota is now asking unanimous consent.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the consideration of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The resolution is a matter of privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought he was asking unanimous consent for the passage of the resolution. Hitherto, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says, this has been a matter of agreement by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS. Why not ask unanimous consent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that it shall be done in that way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi that there is no objection to the arrangement provided for in the latter part of the resolution, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that and to adopt the former part of the resolution, which has always been adopted by a vote of the House. Then I will ask unanimous consent that the division of seats be made as contemplated by the latter part of the resolution by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution in the form indicated by the gentleman from Minnesota, and read the first part of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to draw seats for Members and Delegates of the present Congress, in pursuance of Rule XXXII, and when names of Members absent from the city or on account of sickness are called, that seats be selected by their colleagues.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. I now ask unanimous consent that in the drawing of seats this section to my left be set aside for the Republican Members as their names are called, and that the section on the extreme left of the House be likewise reserved for the Republican Members, leaving the other sections in the center of the Democratic side for the Democratic Members, and this side, in addition to the other seats indicated, for the Republicans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that before this rule is enforced the Hon. J. WARREN KEIFER, an ex-Speaker of this House, be permitted to draw his seat; that the Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, a Member from Pennsylvania, and the "Father of the House;" the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, leader of the minority, and those Members who have served twenty years, or who were Members of the Fiftieth Congress and have served continuously until the present time, also be permitted to draw their seats.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, to that request I shall be forced to make an objection. One word in explanation. I think if we give Members with twenty years' service their seats you will have broken down the line of demarcation, and the next time it will be Members with eighteen years' service, and then fifteen years, and there will be no end to it. I think it would be better to make the request in the usual form for the ex-Speaker who has a seat upon the floor, the leader of the majority, and the leader of the minority, and, of course, the "Father of the House."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will change my request, and also include the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] with those I have already named.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, an ex-Speaker of this House; the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM, the "Father of the House," be permitted to choose their seats.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like also to include the gentleman from New York, Mr. KETCHAM, who has served thirty-four years as a Member of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is better, Mr. Speaker, that we should keep within the precedents.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In the Fifty-seventh Congress

the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Richardson], who was the predecessor of the gentleman from Mississippi as leader of the minority, made a similar request for Mr. Creamer, of New York, because he had been a Member of the House so many years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems very ungracious to object, but I do not see for the life of me where it would stop if we once enter upon this line. It is such an ungracious thing that I hate to do it, but I can see no end to it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and I will withdraw my last request for the gentleman from New York, Mr. KETCHAM.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman's request includes the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. KEIFER, an ex-Speaker of the House; the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE; the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAMS, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BINGHAM. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of Rule XXXII.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

1. At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

The drawing of seats began at 2 o'clock and 22 minutes and was concluded at 3 o'clock and 33 minutes.

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate several messages in writing.

The messages were received from the secretary and handed to the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary (CHARLES G. BENNETT) read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The people of this country continue to enjoy great prosperity. Undoubtedly there will be ebb and flow in such prosperity, and this ebb and flow will be felt more or less by all members of the community, both by the deserving and the undeserving. Against the wrath of the Lord the wisdom of man can not avail; in times of flood or drought human ingenuity can but partially repair the disaster. A general failure of crops would hurt all of us. Again, if the folly of man mars the general well-being, then those who are innocent of the folly will have to pay part of the penalty incurred by those who are guilty of the folly. A panic brought on by the speculative folly of part of the business community would hurt the whole business community. But such stoppage of welfare, though it might be severe, would not be lasting. In the long run the one vital factor in the permanent prosperity of the country is the high individual character of the average American worker, the average American citizen, no matter whether his work be mental or manual, whether he be farmer or wage-worker, business man or professional man.

In our industrial and social system the interests of all men are so closely intertwined that in the immense majority of cases a straight-dealing man who by his efficiency, by his ingenuity and industry, benefits himself must also benefit others. Normally the man of great productive capacity who becomes rich by guiding the labor of many other men does so by enabling them to produce more than they could produce without his guidance; and both he and they share in the benefit, which comes also to the public at large. The superficial fact that the sharing may be unequal must never blind us to the underlying fact that there is this sharing, and that the benefit comes in some degree to each man concerned. Normally the wage-worker, the man of small means, and the average consumer, as well as the average producer, are all alike helped by making conditions such that the man of exceptional business ability receives an exceptional reward for his ability. Something can be done by legislation to help the general prosperity; but no such help of a permanently beneficial character can be given to the less able and less fortunate, save as the results of a policy which shall inure to the advantage of all industrious and efficient people who act decently; and this is only another way of saying that any benefit which comes to the less able and less fortunate must of necessity come even more to the more able and more fortunate. If, therefore, the less fortunate man is moved by envy of his more fortunate brother to strike at the conditions under which they have both, though unequally, prospered, the result will assuredly be that while damage may come to the one struck at, it will visit with an even heavier load the one who strikes the blow. Taken as a whole we must all go up or go down together.

CORPORATIONS.

Yet, while not merely admitting, but insisting upon this, it is also true that where there is no governmental restraint or supervision some of the exceptional men use their energies not in ways that are for the common good, but in ways which tell against this common good. The fortunes amassed through corporate organization are now so large, and vest such power in those that wield them, as to make it a matter of necessity to give to the sovereign—that is, to the Government, which represents the people as a whole—some effective power of supervision over their corporate use. In order to insure a healthy social and industrial life, every big corporation should be held responsible by, and be accountable to, some sovereign strong enough to control its conduct. I am in no sense hostile to corporations. This is an age of combination, and any effort to prevent all combination will be not only useless, but in the end vicious, because of the contempt for law which the failure to enforce law inevitably produces. We should, moreover, recognize in cordial and ample fashion the immense good effected by corporate agencies in a country such as ours, and the wealth of intellect, energy, and fidelity devoted to their service, and therefore normally to the service of the public, by their officers and directors. The corporation has come to stay, just as the trade union has come to stay. Each can do and has done great good. Each should be favored so long as it does good. But each should be sharply checked where it acts against law and justice.

So long as the finances of the Nation are kept upon an honest basis no other question of internal economy with which the Congress has the power to deal begins to approach in importance the matter of endeavoring to secure proper industrial conditions under which the individuals—and especially the great corporations—doing an interstate business are to act. The makers of our National Constitution provided especially that the regulation of interstate commerce should come within the sphere of the General Government. The arguments in favor of their taking this stand were even them overwhelming. But they are far stronger to-day, in view of the enormous development of great business agencies, usually corporate in form. Experience has shown conclusively that it is useless to try to get any adequate regulation and supervision of these great corporations by State action. Such regulation and supervision can only be effectively exercised by a sovereign whose jurisdiction is coextensive with the field of work of the corporations—that is, by the National Government. I believe that this regulation and supervision can be obtained by the enactment of law by the Congress. If this proves impossible, it will certainly be necessary ultimately to confer in fullest form such power upon the National Government by a proper amendment of the Constitution. It would obviously be unwise to endeavor to secure such an amendment until it is certain that the result can not be obtained under the Constitution as it now is. The laws of the Congress and of the several States hitherto, as passed upon by the courts, have resulted more often in showing that the States have no power in the matter than that the National Government has power; so that there at present exists a very unfortunate condition of things, under which these great corporations doing an interstate business occupy the position of subjects without a sovereign, neither any State government nor the National Government having effective control over them. Our steady aim should be by legislation, cautiously and carefully undertaken, but resolutely persevered in, to assert the sovereignty of the National Government by affirmative action.

This is only in form an innovation. In substance it is merely a restoration; for from the earliest time such regulation of industrial activities has been recognized in the action of the law-making bodies; and all that I propose is to meet the changed conditions in such manner as will prevent the Commonwealth abdicating the power it has always possessed, not only in this country but also in England before and since this country became a separate Nation.

It has been a misfortune that the national laws on this subject have hitherto been of a negative or prohibitive rather than an affirmative kind, and still more that they have in part sought to prohibit what could not be effectively prohibited, and have in part in their prohibitions confounded what should be allowed and what should not be allowed. It is generally useless to try to prohibit all restraint on competition, whether this restraint be reasonable or unreasonable; and where it is not useless it is generally hurtful. Events have shown that it is not possible adequately to secure the enforcement of any law of this kind by incessant appeal to the courts. The Department of Justice has for the last four years devoted more attention to the enforcement of the antitrust legislation than to anything else. Much has been accomplished; particularly marked has been the moral effect of the prosecutions; but it is increasingly evident that there will be a very insufficient beneficial result in the way of economic change. The successful prosecution of one device to evade the law immediately develops another device to accomplish the same purpose. What is needed is not sweeping prohibition of every arrangement, good or bad, which may tend to restrict competition, but such adequate supervision and regulation as will prevent any restriction of competition from being to the detriment of the public—as well as such supervision and regulation as will prevent other abuses in no way connected with restriction of competition. Of these abuses, perhaps the chief, although by no means the only one, is overcapitalization—generally itself the result of dishonest promotion—because of the myriad evils it brings in its train; for such overcapitalization often means an inflation that invites business panic; it always conceals the true relation of the profit earned to the capital actually invested, and it creates a burden of interest payments which is a fertile cause of improper reduction in or limitation of wages: it damages the small investor, discourages thrift, and encourages gambling and speculation; while perhaps worst of all is the trickiness and dishonesty which it implies—for harm to morals is worse than any possible harm to material interests, and the debauchery of politics and business by great dishonest corporations is far worse than any actual material evil they do the public. Until the National Government obtains, in some manner which the wisdom of the Congress may suggest, proper control over the big corporations engaged in interstate commerce—that is, over the great majority of the big corporations—it will be impossible to deal adequately with these evils.

I am well aware of the difficulties of the legislation that I am suggesting, and of the need of temperate and cautious action in securing it. I should emphatically protest against improperly radical or hasty action. The first thing to do is to deal with the great corporations engaged in the business of interstate transportation. As I said in my Message of December 6 last, the immediate and most pressing need, so far as legislation is concerned, is the enactment into law of some scheme to secure to the agents of the Government such supervision and regulation of the rates charged by the railroads of the country engaged in interstate traffic as shall summarily and effectively prevent the imposition of unjust or unreasonable rates. It must include putting a complete stop to rebates in every shape and form. This power to regulate rates, like all similar powers over the business world, should be exercised with moderation, caution, and self-restraint; but it should exist, so that it can be effectively exercised when the need arises.

The first consideration to be kept in mind is that the power should be affirmative and should be given to some administrative body created by the Congress. If given to the present Interstate Commerce Commission or to a reorganized Interstate Commerce Commission, such commission should be made unequivocally administrative. I do not believe in the Government interfering with private business more than is necessary. I do not believe in the Government undertaking any work which can with propriety be left in private hands. But neither do I believe in the Government flinching from overseeing any work when it becomes evident that abuses are sure to obtain therein unless there is governmental supervision. It is not my province to indicate the exact terms of the law which should be enacted; but I call the attention of the Congress to certain existing conditions with which it is desirable to deal. In my judgment the most important provision which such law should contain is that conferring upon some competent administrative body the power to decide, upon the case being brought before it, whether a given rate prescribed by a railroad is reasonable and just, and if it is found to be unreasonable and unjust, then, after full investigation of the complaint, to prescribe the limit of rate beyond which it shall not be lawful to go—the maximum reasonable rate, as it is commonly called—this decision to go into effect within a reasonable time and to obtain from thence onward, subject to review by the courts. It sometimes happens at present, not that a rate is too high but that a favored shipper is given too low a rate. In such case the Commission would have the right to fix this already established minimum rate as the maximum, and it would need only one or two such decisions by the Commission to cure railroad companies of the practice of giving improper minimum rates. I call your attention to the fact that my proposal is not to give the Commission power to initiate or originate rates generally, but to regulate a rate already fixed or originated by the roads, upon complaint and after investigation. A heavy penalty should be exacted from any corporation which fails to respect an order of the Commission. I regard this power to establish a maximum rate as being essential to any scheme of real reform in the matter of railway regulation. The first necessity is to secure it; and unless it is granted to the Commission there is little use in touching the subject at all.

Illegal transactions often occur under the forms of law. It has often occurred that a shipper has been told by a traffic officer to buy a large quantity of some commodity and then after it has been bought an open reduction is made in the rate to take effect immediately, the arrangement resulting to the profit of the one shipper and the one railroad and to the damage of all their competitors; for it must not be forgotten that the big shippers are at least as much to blame as any railroad in the matter of rebates. The law should make it clear so that nobody can fail to understand that any kind of commission paid on freight shipments, whether in this form or in the form of fictitious damages, or of a concession, a free pass, reduced passenger rate, or payment of brokerage, is illegal. It is worth while considering whether it would not be wise to confer on the Government the right of civil action against the beneficiary of a rebate for at least twice the value of the rebate; this would help stop what is really blackmail. Elevator allowances should be stopped, for they have now grown to such an extent that they are demoralizing and are used as rebates.

The best possible regulation of rates would, of course, be that regulation secured by an honest agreement among the railroads themselves to carry out the law. Such a general agreement would, for instance, at once put a stop to the efforts of any one big shipper or big railroad to discriminate against or secure advantages over some rival; and such agreement would make the railroads themselves agents for enforcing the law. The power vested in the Government to put a stop to agreements to the detriment of the public should, in my judgment, be accompanied by power to permit, under specified conditions and careful supervision, agreements clearly in the interest of the public. But, in my judgment, the necessity for giving this further power is by no means as great as the necessity for giving the Commission or administrative body the other powers I have enumerated above; and it may well be inadvisable to attempt to vest this particular power in the Commission or other administrative body until it already possesses and is exercising what I regard as by far the most important of all the powers I recommend—as indeed the vitally important power—that to fix a given maximum rate, which rate, after the lapse of a reasonable time, goes into full effect, subject to review by the courts.

All private-car lines, industrial roads, refrigerator charges, and the like should be expressly put under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission or some similar body so far as rates, and agreements practically affecting rates, are concerned. The private-car owners and the owners of industrial railroads are entitled to a fair and reasonable compensation on their investment, but neither private cars nor industrial railroads nor spur tracks should be utilized as devices for securing preferential rates. A rebate in icing charges, or in mileage, or in a division of the rate for refrigerating charges is just as pernicious as a rebate in any other way. No lower rate should apply on goods imported than actually obtains on domestic goods from the American seaboard to destination except in cases where water competition is the controlling influence. There should be publicity of the accounts of common carriers; no common carrier engaged in interstate business should keep any books or memoranda other than those reported pursuant to law or regulation, and these books or memoranda should be open to the inspection of the Government. Only in this way can violations or evasions of the law be surely detected. A system of examination of railroad accounts should be provided similar to that now conducted into the national banks by the bank examiners; a few first-class railroad accountants, if they had proper direction and proper authority to inspect books and papers, could accomplish much in preventing willful violations of the law. It would not be necessary for them to examine into the accounts of any railroad unless for good reasons they were directed to do so by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is greatly to be desired that some way might be found by which an agreement as to transportation within a State intended to operate as a fraud upon the Federal interstate commerce laws could be brought under the jurisdiction of the Federal authorities. At present it occurs that large shipments of interstate traffic are controlled by concessions on purely State business, which of course amounts to an evasion of the law. The Commission should have power to enforce fair treatment by the great trunk lines of lateral and branch lines.

I urge upon the Congress the need of providing for expeditious action by the Interstate Commerce Commission in all these matters, whether in regulating rates for transportation or for storing or for handling property or commodities in transit. The history of the cases litigated under the present commerce act shows that its efficacy has been to a great degree destroyed by the weapon of delay, almost the most formidable weapon in the hands of those whose purpose it is to violate the law.

Let me most earnestly say that these recommendations are not made in any spirit of hostility to the railroads. On ethical grounds, on grounds of right, such hostility would be intolerable; and on grounds of mere national self-interest we must remember that such hostility would tell against the welfare not merely of some few rich men, but of a multitude of small investors, a multitude of railway employees, wage-workers; and most severely against the interest of the public as a whole. I believe that on the whole our railroads have done well and not ill; but the railroad men who wish to do well should not be exposed to competition with those who have no such desire, and the only way to secure this end is to give to some Government tribunal the power to see that justice is done by the unwilling exactly as it is gladly done by the willing. Moreover, if some Government body is given increased power the effect will be to furnish authoritative answer on behalf of the railroad whenever irrational clamor against it is raised, or whenever charges made against it are disproved. I ask this legislation not only in the interest of the public but in the interest of the honest railroad man and the honest shipper alike, for it is they who are chiefly jeoparded by the practices of their dishonest competitors. This legislation should be enacted in a spirit as remote as possible from hysteria and rancor. If we of the American body politic are true to the traditions we have inherited we shall always scorn any effort to make us hate any man because he is rich, just as much as we should scorn any effort to make us look down upon or treat contemptuously any man because he is poor. We judge a man by his conduct—that is, by his character—and not by his wealth or intellect. If he makes his fortune honestly, there is no just cause of quarrel with him. Indeed, we have nothing but the kindliest feelings of admiration for the successful business man who behaves decently, whether he has made his success by building or managing a railroad or by shipping goods over that railroad. The big railroad men and big shippers are simply Americans of the ordinary type who have developed to an extraordinary degree certain great business qualities. They are neither better nor worse than their fellow-citizens of smaller means. They are merely more able in certain lines and therefore exposed to certain peculiarly strong temptations. These temptations have not sprung newly into being; the exceptionally successful among mankind have always been exposed to them; but they have grown amazingly in power as a result of the extraordinary development of industrialism along new lines, and under these new conditions, which the lawmakers of old could not foresee and therefore could not provide against, they have become so serious and menacing as to demand entirely new remedies. It is in the interest of the best type of railroad man and the best type of shipper no less than of the public that there should be governmental supervision and regulation of these great business operations, for the same reason that it is in the interest of the corporation which wishes to treat its employees aright that there should be an effective employers' liability act, or an effective system of factory laws to prevent the abuse of women and children. All such legislation frees the corporation that wishes to do well from being driven into doing ill, in order to compete with its rival, which prefers to do ill. We desire to set up a moral standard. There can be no delusion more fatal to the Nation than the delusion that the standard of profits, of business prosperity, is sufficient in judging any business or political question—from rate legislation to municipal government. Business success, whether for the individual or for the Nation, is a good thing only so far as it is accompanied by and develops a high standard of conduct—honor, integrity, civic courage. The kind of business prosperity that blunts the standard of honor, that puts an inordinate value on mere wealth, that makes a man ruthless and conscienceless in trade and weak and cowardly in citizenship, is not a good thing at all, but a very bad thing for the Nation. This Government stands for manhood first and for business only as an adjunct of manhood.

The question of transportation lies at the root of all industrial success, and the revolution in transportation which has taken place during the last half century has been the most important factor in the growth of the new industrial conditions. Most emphatically we do not wish to see the man of great talents refused the reward for his talents. Still less do we wish to see him penalized; but we do desire to see the system of railroad transportation so handled that the strong man shall be given no advantage over the weak man. We wish to insure as fair treatment for the small town as for the big city; for the small shipper as for the big shipper. In the old days the highway of commerce, whether by water or by a road on land, was open to all; it belonged to the public and the traffic along it was free. At present the railway is this highway, and we must do our best to see that it is kept open to all on equal terms. Unlike the old highway it is a very difficult and complex thing to manage, and it is far better that it should be managed by private individuals than by the Government. But it can only be so managed on condition that justice is done the public. It is because, in my judgment, public ownership of railroads is highly undesirable and would probably in this country entail far-reaching disaster, that I wish to see such supervision and regulation of them in the interest of the public as will make it evident that there is no need for public ownership. The opponents of Government regulation dwell upon the difficulties to be encountered and the intricate and involved nature of the problem. Their contention is true. It is a complicated and delicate problem, and all kinds of difficulties are sure to arise in connection with any plan of solution, while no plan will bring all the benefits hoped for by its more optimistic adherents. Moreover, under any healthy plan, the benefits will develop gradually and not rapidly. Finally, we must clearly understand that the public servants who are to do this peculiarly responsible and delicate work must themselves be of the highest type both as regards integrity and efficiency. They must be well paid, for otherwise able men can not in the long run be secured; and they must possess a lofty probity which will revolt as quickly at the thought of pandering to any gust of popular prejudice against rich men as at the thought of anything even remotely resembling subserviency to rich men. But while I fully admit the difficulties in the way, I do not for a moment admit that these difficulties warrant us in stopping in our effort to secure a wise and just system. They should have no other effect than to spur us on to the exercise of the resolution, the even-handed justice, and the fertility of resource, which we like to think of as typically American, and which will in the end achieve good results in this as in other fields of activity. The task is a great one and underlies the task of dealing with the whole industrial problem. But the fact that it is a great problem does not warrant us in shrinking from the attempt to solve it. At present we face such utter lack of supervision, such freedom from the restraints of law, that excellent men have often been literally forced into doing what they deplored because otherwise they were left at the mercy of unscrupulous competitors. To rail at and assail the men who have done as they best could under such conditions accomplishes little. What we need to do is to develop an orderly system; and such a system can only come through the gradually increased exercise of the right of efficient Government control.

SAFETY APPLIANCES.

In my annual Message to the Fifty-eighth Congress, at its third session, I called attention to the necessity for legislation requiring the use of block signals upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce. The number of serious collisions upon unblocked roads that have occurred within the past year adds force to the recommendation then made. The Congress should provide, by appropriate legislation, for the introduction of block signals upon all railroads engaged in interstate commerce at the earliest practicable date, as a measure of increased safety to the traveling public.

Through decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and the lower Federal courts in cases brought before them for adjudication the safety-appliance law has been materially strengthened, and the Government has been enabled to secure its effective enforcement in almost all cases, with the result that the condition of railroad equipment throughout the country is much improved and railroad employees perform their duties under safer conditions than heretofore. The Government's most effective aid in arriving at this result has been its inspection service, and that these improved conditions are not more general is due to the insufficient number of inspectors employed.

The inspection service has fully demonstrated its usefulness, and in appropriating for its maintenance the Congress should make provision for an increase in the number of inspectors.

HOURS OF LABOR OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The excessive hours of labor to which railroad employees in train service are in many cases subjected is also a matter which may well engage the serious attention of the Congress. The strain, both mental and physical, upon those who are engaged in the movement and operation of railroad trains under modern conditions is perhaps greater than that which exists in any other industry, and if there are any reasons for limiting by law the hours of labor in any employment, they certainly apply with peculiar force to the employment of those upon whose vigilance and alertness in the performance of their duties the safety of all who travel by rail depends.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY LAW.

In my annual Message to the Fifty-seventh Congress, at its second session, I recommended the passage of an Employers' Liability Law for the District of Columbia and in our navy-yards. I renewed that recommendation in my Message to the Fifty-eighth Congress, at its second session, and further suggested the appointment of a commission to make a comprehensive study of employers' liability, with a view to the enactment of a wise and constitutional law covering the subject, applicable to all industries within the scope of the Federal power. I hope that such a law will be prepared and enacted as speedily as possible.

LABOR.

The National Government has as a rule but little occasion to deal with the formidable group of problems connected more or less directly with what is known as the labor question, for in the great majority of cases these problems must be dealt with by the State and municipal authorities and not by the National Government. The National Government has control of the District of Columbia, however, and it should see to it that the City of Washington is made a model city in all respects, both as regards parks, public playgrounds, proper regulation of the system of housing so as to do away with the evils of alley tenements, a proper system of education, a proper system of dealing with truancy and juvenile offenders, a proper handling of the charitable work of the District. Moreover, there should be proper factory laws to prevent all abuses in the employment of women and children in the District. These will be useful chiefly as object lessons, but even this limited amount of usefulness would be of real national value.

There has been demand for depriving courts of the power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. Such special limitation of the equity powers of our courts would be most unwise. It is true that some judges have misused this power; but this does not justify a denial of the power any more than an improper exercise of the power to call a strike by a labor leader would justify the denial of the right to strike. The remedy is to regulate the procedure by requiring the judge to give due notice to the adverse parties before granting the writ, the hearing to be ex parte if the adverse party does not appear at the time and place ordered. What is due notice must depend upon the facts of the case; it should not be used as a pretext to permit violation of law, or the jeopardizing of life or property. Of course, this would not authorize the issuing of a restraining order or injunction in any case in which it is not already authorized by existing law.

I renew the recommendation I made in my last annual Message for an investigation by the Department of Commerce and Labor of general labor conditions, especial attention to be paid to the conditions of child labor and child-labor legislation in the several States. Such an investigation should take into account the various problems with which the question of child labor is connected. It is true that these problems can be actually met in most cases only by the States themselves, but it would be well for the Nation to endeavor to secure and publish comprehensive information as to the conditions of the labor of children in the different States, so as to spur up those that are behindhand, and to secure approximately uniform legislation of a high character among the several States. In such a Republic as ours the one thing that we can not afford to neglect is the problem of turning out decent citizens. The future of the Nation depends upon the citizenship of the generations to come; the children of to-day are those who to-morrow will shape the destiny of our land, and we can not afford to neglect them. The legislature of Colorado has recommended that the National Government provide some general measure for the protection from abuse of children and dumb animals throughout the United States. I lay the matter before you for what I trust will be your favorable consideration.

The Department of Commerce and Labor should also make a thorough investigation of the conditions of women in industry. Over five million American women are now engaged in gainful occupations; yet there is an almost complete dearth of data upon which to base any trustworthy conclusions as regards a subject as important as it is vast and complicated. There is need of full knowledge on which to base action looking toward State and municipal legislation for the protection of working women. The introduction of women into industry is working change and disturbance in the domestic and social life of the Nation. The decrease in marriage, and especially in the birth rate, has been coincident with it. We must face accomplished facts, and the adjustment to factory conditions must be made; but surely it can be made with less friction and less harmful effects on family life than is now the case. This whole matter in reality forms one of the greatest sociological phenomena of our time; it is a social question of the first importance, of far greater importance than any merely political or economic question can be; and to solve it we need ample data, gathered in a sane and scientific spirit in the course of an exhaustive investigation.

In any great labor disturbance not only are employer and employee interested, but also a third party—the general public. Every considerable labor difficulty in which interstate commerce is involved should be investigated by the Government and the facts officially reported to the public.

The question of securing a healthy, self-respecting, and mutually sympathetic attitude as betweeen employer and employee, capitalist and wage-worker, is a difficult one. All phases of the labor problem prove difficult when approached. But the underlying principles, the root principles, in accordance with which the problem must be solved are entirely simple. We can get justice and right dealing only if we put as of paramount importance the principle of treating a man on his worth as a man rather than with reference to his social position, his occupation, or the class to which he belongs. There are selfish and brutal men in all ranks of life. If they are capitalists their selfishness and brutality may take the form of hard indifference to suffering, greedy disregard of every moral restraint which interferes with the accumulation of wealth, and cold-blooded exploitation of the weak; or, if they are laborers, the form of laziness, of sullen envy of the more fortunate, and of willingness to perform deeds of murderous violence. Such conduct is just as reprehensible in one case as in the other, and all honest and farseeing men should join in warring against it wherever it becomes manifest. Individual capitalist and individual wage-worker, corporation and union, are alike entitled to the protection of the law, and must alike obey the law. Moreover, in addition to mere obedience to the law, each man, if he be really a good citizen, must show broad sympathy for his neighbor and genuine desire to look at any question arising between them from the standpoint of that neighbor no less than from his own; and to this end it is essential that capitalist and wage-worker should consult freely one with the other, should each strive to bring closer the day when both shall realize that they are properly partners and not enemies. To approach the questions which inevitably arise between them solely from the standpoint which treats each side in the mass as the enemy of the other side in the mass is both wicked and foolish. In the past the most direful among the influences which have brought about the downfall of republics has ever been the growth of the class spirit, the growth of the spirit which tends to make a man subordinate the welfare of the public as a whole to the welfare of the particular class to which he belongs, the substitution of loyalty to a class for loyalty to the nation. This inevitably brings about a tendency to treat each man not on his merits as an individual, but on his position as belonging to a certain class in the community. If such a spirit grows up in this Republic it will ultimately prove fatal to us, as in the past it has proved fatal to every community in which it has become dominant. Unless we continue to keep a quick and lively sense of the great fundamental truth that our concern is with the individual worth of the individual man, this Government can not permanently hold the place which it has achieved among the nations. The vital lines of cleavage among our people do not correspond, and indeed run at right angles to, the lines of cleavage which divide occupation from occupation, which divide wage-workers from capitalists, farmers from bankers, men of small means from men of large means, men who live in the towns from men who live in the country; for the vital line of cleavage is the line which divides the honest man who tries to do well by his neighbor from the dishonest man who does ill by his neighbor. In other words, the standard we should establish is the standard of conduct, not the standard of occupation, of means, or of social position. It is the man's moral quality, his attitude toward the great questions which concern all humanity, his cleanliness of life, his power to do his duty toward himself and toward others, which really count; and if we substitute for the standard of personal judgment which treats each man according to his merits, another standard in accordance with which all men of one class are favored and all men of another class discriminated against, we shall do irreparable damage to the body politic. I believe that our people are too sane, too self-respecting, too fit for self-government, ever to adopt such an attitude. This Government is not and never shall be government by a plutocracy. This Government is not and never shall be government by a mob. It shall continue to be in the future what it has been in the past, a government based on the theory that each man, rich or poor, is to be treated simply and solely on his worth as a man, that all his personal and property rights are to be safeguarded, and that he is neither to wrong others nor to suffer wrong from others.

The noblest of all forms of government is self-government; but it is also the most difficult. We who possess this priceless boon, and who desire to hand it on to our children and our children's children, should ever bear in mind the thought so finely expressed by Burke: "Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as they are disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and good in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society can not exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere, and the less of it there be within the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate minds can not be free. Their passions forge their fetters."

INSURANCE.

The great insurance companies afford striking examples of corporations whose business has extended so far beyond the jurisdiction of the States which created them as to preclude strict enforcement of supervision and regulation by the parent States. In my last annual Message I recommended "that the Congress carefully consider whether the power of the Bureau of Corporations can not constitutionally be extended to cover interstate transactions in insurance." Recent events have emphasized the importance of an early and exhaustive consideration of this question, to see whether it is not possible to furnish better safeguards than the several States have been able to furnish against corruption of the flagrant kind which has been exposed. It has been only too clearly shown that certain of the men at the head of these large corporations take but small note of the ethical distinction between honesty and dishonesty; they draw the line only this side of what may be called law-honesty, the kind of honesty necessary in order to avoid falling into the clutches of the law. Of course the only complete remedy for this condition must be found in an aroused public conscience, a higher sense of ethical conduct in the community at large, and especially among business men and in the great profession of the law, and in the growth of a spirit which condemns all dishonesty, whether in rich man or in poor man, whether it takes the shape of bribery or of blackmail. But much can be done by legislation which is not only drastic but practical. There is need of a far stricter and more uniform regulation of the vast insurance interests of this country. The United States should in this respect follow the policy of other nations by providing adequate national supervision of commercial interests which are clearly national in character. My predecessors have repeatedly recognized that the foreign business of these companies is an important part of our foreign commercial relations. During the Administrations of Presidents Cleveland, Harrison, and McKinley the State Department exercised its influence, through diplomatic channels, to prevent unjust discrimination by foreign countries against American insurance companies. These negotiations illustrated the propriety of the Congress recognizing the national character of insurance, for in the absence of Federal legislation the State Department could only give expression to the wishes of the authorities of the several States, whose policy was ineffective through want of uniformity.

I repeat my previous recommendation that the Congress should also consider whether the Federal Government has any power or owes any duty with respect to domestic transactions in insurance of an interstate character. That State supervision has proved inadequate is generally conceded. The burden upon insurance companies, and therefore their policy holders, of conflicting regulations of many States, is unquestioned, while but little effective check is imposed upon any able and unscrupulous man who desires to exploit the company in his own interest at the expense of the policy holders and of the public. The inability of a State to regulate effectively insurance corporations created under the laws of other States and transacting the larger part of their business elsewhere is also clear. As a remedy for this evil of conflicting, ineffective, and yet burdensome regulations there has been for many years a widespread demand for Federal supervision. The Congress has already recognized that interstate insurance may be a proper subject for Federal legislation, for in creating the Bureau of Corporations it authorized it to publish and supply useful information concerning interstate corporations, "including corporations engaged in insurance." It is obvious that if the compilation of statistics be the limit of the Federal power, it is wholly ineffective to regulate this form of commercial intercourse between the States, and as the insurance business has outgrown in magnitude the possibility of adequate State supervision, the Congress should carefully consider whether further legislation can be had. What is said above applies with equal force to fraternal and benevolent organizations which contract for life insurance.

THE REVENUES.

There is more need of stability than of the attempt to attain an ideal perfection in the methods of raising revenue; and the shock and strain to the business world certain to attend any serious change in these methods render such change inadvisable unless for grave reason. It is not possible to lay down any general rule by which to determine the moment when the reasons for will outweigh the reasons against such a change. Much must depend, not merely on the needs, but on the desires, of the people as a whole; for needs and desires are not necessarily identical. Of course no change can be made on lines beneficial to, or desired by, one section or one State only. There must be something like a general agreement among the citizens of the several States, as represented in the Congress, that the change is needed and desired in the interest of the people as a whole; and there should then be a sincere, intelligent, and disinterested effort to make it in such shape as will combine, so far as possible, the maximum of good to the people at large with the minimum of necessary disregard for the special interests of localities or classes. But in time of peace the revenue must on the average, taking a series of years together, equal the expenditures or else the revenues must be increased. Last year there was a deficit. Unless our expenditures can be kept within the revenues then our revenue laws must be readjusted. It is as yet too early to attempt to outline what shape such a readjustment should take, for it is as yet too early to say whether there will be need for it. It should be considered whether it is not desirable that the tariff laws should provide for applying as against or in favor of any other nation maximum and minimum tariff rates established by the Congress, so as to secure a certain reciprocity of treatment between other nations and ourselves. Having in view even larger considerations of policy than those of a purely economic nature, it would, in my judgment, be well to endeavor to bring about closer commercial connections with the other peoples of this continent. I am happy to be able to announce to you that Russia now treats us on the most-favored-nation basis.

ECONOMY IN EXPENDITURES.

I earnestly recommend to the Congress the need of economy and to this end of a rigid scrutiny of appropriations. As examples merely, I call your attention to one or two specific matters. All unnecessary offices should be abolished. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends the abolishment of the office of receiver of public moneys for United States land offices. This will effect a saving of about a quarter of a million dollars a year. As the business of the Nation grows it is inevitable that there should be from time to time a legitimate increase in the number of officials, and this fact renders it all the more important that when offices become unnecessary they should be abolished. In the public printing also a large saving of public money can be made. There is a constantly growing tendency to publish masses of unimportant information. It is probably not unfair to say that many tens of thousands of volumes are published at which no human being ever looks and for which there is no real demand whatever.

Yet, in speaking of economy, I must in no wise be understood as advocating the false economy which is in the end the worst extravagance. To cut down on the Navy, for instance, would be a crime against the Nation. To fail to push forward all work on the Panama Canal would be as great a folly.

CURRENCY.

In my Message of December 2, 1902, to the Congress, I said: "Interest rates are a potent factor in business activity, and in order that these rates may be equalized to meet the varying needs of the seasons and of widely separated communities, and to prevent the recurrence of financial stringencies which injuriously affect legitimate business, it is necessary that there should be an element of elasticity in our monetary system. Banks are the natural servants of commerce, and upon them should be placed, as far as practicable, the burden of furnishing and maintaining a circulation adequate to supply the needs of our diversified industries and of our domestic and foreign commerce; and the issue of this should be so regulated that a sufficient supply should be always available for the business interests of the country."

Every consideration of prudence demands the addition of the element of elasticity to our currency system. The evil does not consist in an inadequate volume of money, but in the rigidity of this volume, which does not respond as it should to the varying needs of communities and of seasons. Inflation must be avoided; but some provision should be made that will insure a larger volume of money during the fall and winter months than in the less active seasons of the year; so that the currency will contract against speculation, and will expand for the needs of legitimate business. At present the Treasury Department is at irregularly recurring intervals obliged, in the interest of the business world—that is, in the interests of the American public—to try to avert financial crises by providing a remedy which should be provided by Congressional action.

BUSINESS METHODS IN DEPARTMENTS.

At various times I have instituted investigations into the organization and conduct of the business of the Executive Departments. While none of these inquiries have yet progressed far enough to warrant final conclusions, they have already confirmed and emphasized the general impression that the organization of the Departments is often faulty in principle and wasteful in results, while many of their business methods are antiquated and inefficient. There is every reason why our executive governmental machinery should be at least as well planned, economical, and efficient as the best machinery of the great business organizations, which at present is not the case. To make it so is a task of complex detail and essentially executive in its nature; probably no legislative body, no matter how wise and able, could undertake it with reasonable prospect of success. I recommend that the Congress consider this subject with a view to provide by legislation for the transfer, distribution, consolidation, and assignment of duties and executive organizations or parts of organizations, and for the changes in business methods, within or between the several Departments, that will best promote the economy, efficiency, and high character of the Government work.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS.

In my last annual Message I said:

"The power of the Government to protect the integrity of the elections of its own officials is inherent and has been recognized and affirmed by repeated declarations of the Supreme Court. There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. No one defends or excuses corruption, and it would seem to follow that none would oppose vigorous measures to eradicate it. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in Federal elections. The details of such a law may be safely left to the wise discretion of the Congress, but it should go as far as under the Constitution it is possible to go, and should include severe penalties against him who gives or receives a bribe intended to influence his act or opinion as an elector; and provisions for the publication not only of the expenditures for nominations and elections of all candidates, but also of all contributions received and expenditures made by political committees."

I desire to repeat this recommendation. In political campaigns in a country as large and populous as ours it is inevitable that there should be much expense of an entirely legitimate kind. This, of course, means that many contributions, and some of them of large size, must be made, and, as a matter of fact, in any big political contest such contributions are always made to both sides. It is entirely proper both to give and receive them, unless there is an improper motive connected with either gift or reception. If they are extorted by any kind of pressure or promise, express or implied, direct or indirect, in the way of favor or immunity, then the giving or receiving becomes not only improper but criminal. It will undoubtedly be difficult as a matter of practical detail to shape an act which shall guard with reasonable certainty against such misconduct; but if it is possible to secure by law the full and verified publication in detail of all the sums contributed to and expended by the candidates or committees of any political parties the result can not but be wholesome. All contributions by corporations to any political committee or for any political purpose should be forbidden by law; directors should not be permitted to use stockholders' money for such purposes; and, moreover, a prohibition of this kind would be, as far as it went, an effective method of stopping the evils aimed at in corrupt practices acts. Not only should both the National and the several State legislatures forbid any officer of a corporation from using the money of the corporation in or about any election, but they should also forbid such use of money in connection with any legislation save by the employment of counsel in public manner for distinctly legal services.

THE HAGUE CONFERENCE.

The first Conference of Nations held at The Hague in 1899, being unable to dispose of all the business before it, recommended the consideration and settlement of a number of important questions by another conference to be called subsequently and at an early date. These questions were the following: (1) The rights and duties of neutrals; (2) the limitation of the armed forces on land and sea, and of military budgets; (3) the use of new types and calibers of military and naval guns; (4) the inviolability of private property at sea in times of war; (5) the bombardment of ports, cities, and villages by naval forces. In October, 1904, at the instance of the Interparliamentary Union, which, at a conference held in the United States and attended by the lawmakers of fifteen different nations, had reiterated the demand for a second Conference of Nations, I issued invitations to all the powers signatory to The Hague Convention to send delegates to such a conference and suggested that it be again held at The Hague. In its note of December 16, 1904, the United States Government communicated to the representatives of foreign governments its belief that the conference could be best arranged under the provisions of the present Hague treaty.

From all the Powers acceptance was received, coupled in some cases with the condition that we should wait until the end of the war then waging between Russia and Japan. The Emperor of Russia, immediately after the treaty of peace which so happily terminated this war, in a note presented to the President on September 13, through Ambassador Rosen, took the initiative in recommending that the conference be now called. The United States Government in response expressed its cordial acquiescence and stated that it would, as a matter of course, take part in the new conference and endeavor to further its aims. We assume that all civilized governments will support the movement, and that the conference is now an assured fact. This Government will do everything in its power to secure the success of the conference to the end that substantial progress may be made in the cause of international peace, justice, and good will.

This renders it proper at this time to say something as to the general attitude of this Government toward peace. More and more war is coming to be looked upon as in itself a lamentable and evil thing. A wanton or useless war, or a war of mere aggression—in short, any war begun or carried on in a conscienceless spirit, is to be condemend as a peculiarly atrocious crime against all humanity. We can, however, do nothing of permanent value for peace unless we keep ever clearly in mind the ethical element which lies at the root of the problem. Our aim is righteousness. Peace is normally the handmaiden of righteousness; but when peace and righteousness conflict then a great and upright people can never for a moment hesitate to follow the path which leads toward righteousness, even though that path also leads to war. There are persons who advocate peace at any price; there are others who, following a false analogy, think that because it is no longer necessary in civilized countries for individuals to protect their rights with a strong hand, it is therefore unnecessary for nations to be ready to defend their rights. These persons would do irreparable harm to any nation that adopted their principles, and even as it is they seriously hamper the cause which they advocate by tending to render it absurd in the eyes of sensible and patriotic men. There can be no worse foe of mankind in general, and of his own country in particular, than the demagogue of war, the man who in mere folly or to serve his own selfish ends continually rails at and abuses other nations, who seeks to excite his countrymen against foreigners on insufficient pretexts, who excites and inflames a perverse and aggressive national vanity, and who may on occasions wantonly bring on conflict between his nation and some other nation. But there are demagogues of peace just as there are demagogues of war, and in any such movement as this for The Hague conference it is essential not to be misled by one set of extremists any more than by the other. Whenever it is possible for a nation or an individual to work for real peace, assuredly it is failure of duty not to so strive; but if war is necessary and righteous then either the man or the nation shrinking from it forfeits all title to self-respect. We have scant sympathy with the sentimentalist who dreads oppression less than physical suffering, who would prefer a shameful peace to the pain and toil sometimes lamentably necessary in order to secure a righteous peace. As yet there is only a partial and imperfect analogy between international law and internal or municipal law, because there is no sanction of force for executing the former while there is in the case of the latter. The private citizen is protected in his rights by the law, because the law rests in the last resort upon force exercised through the forms of law. A man does not have to defend his rights with his own hand, because he can call upon the police, upon the sheriff's posse, upon the militia, or in certain extreme cases upon the Army, to defend him. But there is no such sanction of force for international law. At present there could be no greater calamity than for the free peoples, the enlightened, independent, and peace-loving peoples, to disarm while yet leaving it open to any barbarism or despotism to remain armed. So long as the world is as unorganized as now, the armies and navies of those peoples who on the whole stand for justice, offer not only the best, but the only possible, security for a just peace. For instance, if the United States alone, or in company only with the other nations that on the whole tend to act justly, disarmed, we might sometimes avoid bloodshed, but we would cease to be of weight in securing the peace of justice—the real peace for which the most law-abiding and high-minded men must at times be willing to fight. As the world is now, only that nation is equipped for peace that knows how to fight and that will not shrink from fighting if ever the conditions become such that war is demanded in the name of the highest morality.

So much it is emphatically necessary to say in order both that the position of the United States may not be misunderstood, and that a genuine effort to bring nearer the day of the peace of justice among the nations may not be hampered by a folly which, in striving to achieve the impossible, would render it hopeless to attempt the achievement of the practical. But while recognizing most clearly all above set forth, it remains our clear duty to strive in every practicable way to bring nearer the time when the sword shall not be the arbiter among nations. At present the practical thing to do is to try to minimize the number of cases in which it must be the arbiter, and to offer, at least to all civilized powers, some substitute for war which will be available in at least a considerable number of instances. Very much can be done through another Hague conference in this direction, and I most earnestly urge that this Nation do all in its power to try to further the movement and to make the result of the decisions of The Hague conference effective. I earnestly hope that the conference may be able to devise some way to make arbitration between nations the customary way of settling international disputes in all save a few classes of cases, which should themselves be as sharply defined and rigidly limited as the present governmental and social development of the world will permit. If possible, there should be a general arbitration treaty negotiated among all the nations represented at the conference. Neutral rights and property should be protected at sea as they are protected on land. There should be an international agreement to this purpose and a similar agreement defining contraband of war.

During the last century there has been a distinct diminution in the number of wars between the most civilized nations. International relations have become closer, and the development of The Hague tribunal is not only a symptom of this growing closeness of relationship, but is a means by which the growth can be furthered. Our aim should be from time to time to take such steps as may be possible toward creating something like an organization of the civilized nations, because as the world becomes more highly organized the need for navies and armies will diminish. It is not possible to secure anything like an immediate disarmament, because it would first be necessary to settle what peoples are on the whole a menace to the rest of mankind, and to provide against the disarmament of the rest being turned into a movement which would really chiefly benefit these obnoxious peoples; but it may be possible to exercise some check upon the tendency to swell indefinitely the budgets for military expenditure. Of course such an effort could succeed only if it did not attempt to do too much; and if it were undertaken in a spirit of sanity as far removed as possible from a merely hysterical pseudo-philanthropy. It is worth while pointing out that since the end of the insurrection in the Philippines this Nation has shown its practical faith in the policy of disarmament by reducing its little army one-third. But disarmament can never be of prime importance: there is more need to get rid of the causes of war than of the implements of war.

I have dwelt much on the dangers to be avoided by steering clear of any mere foolish sentimentality because my wish for peace is so genuine and earnest; because I have a real and great desire that this second Hague conference may mark a long stride forward in the direction of securing the peace of justice throughout the world. No object is better worthy the attention of enlightened statesmanship than the establishment of a surer method than now exists of securing justice as between nations, both for the protection of the little nations and for the prevention of war between the big nations. To this aim we should endeavor not only to avert bloodshed, but, above all, effectively to strengthen the forces of right. The Golden Rule should be, and as the world grows in morality it will be, the guiding rule of conduct among nations as among individuals; though the Golden Rule must not be construed, in fantastic manner, as forbidding the exercise of the police power. This mighty and free Republic should ever deal with all other states, great or small, on a basis of high honor, respecting their rights as jealously as it safeguards its own.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

One of the most effective instruments for peace is the Monroe Doctrine as it has been and is being gradually developed by this Nation and accepted by other nations. No other policy could have been as efficient in promoting peace in the Western Hemisphere and in giving to each nation thereon the chance to develop along its own lines. If we had refused to apply the Doctrine to changing conditions it would now be completely outworn, would not meet any of the needs of the present day, and indeed would probably by this time have sunk into complete oblivion. It is useful at home, and is meeting with recognition abroad because we have adapted our application of it to meet the growing and changing needs of the Hemisphere. When we announce a policy, such as the Monroe Doctrine, we thereby commit ourselves to the consequences of the policy, and those consequences from time to time alter. It is out of the question to claim a right and yet shirk the responsibility for its exercise. Not only we, but all American Republics who are benefited by the existence of the Doctrine, must recognize the obligations each nation is under as regards foreign peoples no less than its duty to insist upon its own rights.

That our rights and interests are deeply concerned in the maintenance of the Doctrine is so clear as hardly to need argument. This is especially true in view of the construction of the Panama Canal. As a mere matter of self-defense we must exercise a close watch over the approaches to this canal; and this means that we must be thoroughly alive to our interests in the Caribbean Sea.

There are certain essential points which must never be forgotten as regards the Monroe Doctrine. In the first place we must as a nation make it evident that we do not intend to treat it in any shape or way as an excuse for aggrandizement on our part at the expense of the republics to the south. We must recognize the fact that in some South American countries there has been much suspicion lest we should interpret the Monroe Doctrine as in some way inimical to their interests, and we must try to convince all the other nations of this continent once and for all that no just and orderly government has anything to fear from us. There are certain republics to the south of us which have already reached such a point of stability, order, and prosperity that they themselves, though as yet hardly consciously, are among the guarantors of this Doctrine. These republics we now meet not only on a basis of entire equality, but in a spirit of frank and respectful friendship, which we hope is mutual. If all of the republics to the south of us will only grow as those to which I allude have already grown, all need for us to be the especial champions of the Doctrine will disappear, for no stable and growing American Republic wishes to see some great non-American military power acquire territory in its neighborhood. All that this country desires is that the other republics on this Continent shall be happy and prosperous; and they can not be happy and prosperous unless they maintain order within their boundaries and behave with a just regard for their obligations toward outsiders. It must be understood that under no circumstances will the United States use the Monroe Doctrine as a cloak for territorial aggression. We desire peace with all the world, but perhaps most of all with the other peoples of the American Continent. There are of course limits to the wrongs which any self-respecting nation can endure. It is always possible that wrong actions toward this Nation, or toward citizens of this Nation, in some State unable to keep order among its own people, unable to secure justice from outsiders, and unwilling to do justice to those outsiders who treat it well, may result in our having to take action to protect our rights; but such action will not be taken with a view to territorial aggression, and it will be taken at all only with extreme reluctance and when it has become evident that every other resource has been exhausted.

Moreover, we must make it evident that we do not intend to permit the Monroe Doctrine to be used by any nation on this Continent as a shield to protect it from the consequences of its own misdeeds against foreign nations. If a republic to the south of us commits a tort against a foreign nation, such as an outrage against a citizen of that nation, then the Monroe Doctrine does not force us to interfere to prevent punishment of the tort, save to see that the punishment does not assume the form of territorial occupation in any shape. The case is more difficult when it refers to a contractual obligation. Our own Government has always refused to enforce such contractual obligations on behalf of its citizens by an appeal to arms. It is much to be wished that all foreign governments would take the same view. But they do not; and in consequence we are liable at any time to be brought face to face with disagreeable alternatives. On the one hand, this country would certainly decline to go to war to prevent a foreign government from collecting a just debt; on the other hand, it is very inadvisable to permit any foreign power to take possession, even temporarily, of the custom-houses of an American Republic in order to enforce the payment of its obligations; for such temporary occupation might turn into a permanent occupation. The only escape from these alternatives may at any time be that we must ourselves undertake to bring about some arrangement by which so much as possible of a just obligation shall be paid. It is far better that this country should put through such an arrangement, rather than allow any foreign country to undertake it. To do so insures the defaulting republic from having to pay debts of an improper character under duress, while it also insures honest creditors of the republic from being passed by in the interest of dishonest or grasping creditors. Moreover, for the United States to take such a position offers the only possible way of insuring us against a clash with some foreign power. The position is, therefore, in the interest of peace as well as in the interest of justice. It is of benefit to our people; it is of benefit to foreign peoples; and most of all it is really of benefit to the people of the country concerned.

This brings me to what should be one of the fundamental objects of the Monroe Doctrine. We must ourselves in good faith try to help upward toward peace and order those of our sister republics which need such help. Just as there has been a gradual growth of the ethical element in the relations of one individual to another, so we are, even though slowly, more and more coming to recognize the duty of bearing one another's burdens, not only as among individuals, but also as among nations.

SANTO DOMINGO.

Santo Domingo, in her turn, has now made an appeal to us to help her, and not only every principle of wisdom but every generous instinct within us bids us respond to the appeal. It is not of the slightest consequence whether we grant the aid needed by Santo Domingo as an incident to the wise development of the Monroe Doctrine, or because we regard the case of Santo Domingo as standing wholly by itself, and to be treated as such, and not on general principles or with any reference to the Monroe Doctrine. The important point is to give the needed aid, and the case is certainly sufficiently peculiar to deserve to be judged purely on its own merits. The conditions in Santo Domingo have for a number of years grown from bad to worse until a year ago all society was on the verge of dissolution. Fortunately, just at this time a ruler sprang up in Santo Domingo, who, with his colleagues, saw the dangers threatening their country and appealed to the friendship of the only great and powerful neighbor who possessed the power, and as they hoped also the will to help them. There was imminent danger of foreign intervention. The previous rulers of Santo Domingo had recklessly incurred debts, and owing to her internal disorders she had ceased to be able to provide means of paying the debts. The patience of her foreign creditors had become exhausted, and at least two foreign nations were on the point of intervention, and were only prevented from intervening by the unofficial assurance of this Government that it would itself strive to help Santo Domingo in her hour of need. In the case of one of these nations, only the actual opening of negotiations to this end by our Government prevented the seizure of territory in Santo Domingo by a European power. Of the debts incurred some were just, while some were not of a character which really renders it obligatory on, or proper for, Santo Domingo to pay them in full. But she could not pay any of them unless some stability was assured her Government and people.

Accordingly the Executive Department of our Government negotiated a treaty under which we are to try to help the Dominican people to straighten out their finances. This treaty is pending before the Senate. In the meantime a temporary arrangement has been made which will last until the Senate has had time to take action upon the treaty. Under this arrangement the Dominican Government has appointed Americans to all the important positions in the customs service, and they are seeing to the honest collection of the revenues, turning over 45 per cent to the Government for running expenses and putting the other 55 per cent into a safe depositary for equitable division in case the treaty shall be ratified, among the various creditors, whether European or American.

The custom-houses offer well-nigh the only sources of revenue in Santo Domingo, and the different revolutions usually have as their real aim the obtaining possession of these custom-houses. The mere fact that the collectors of customs are Americans, that they are performing their duties with efficiency and honesty, and that the treaty is pending in the Senate, gives a certain moral power to the Government of Santo Domingo which it has not had before. This has completely discouraged all revolutionary movement, while it has already produced such an increase in the revenues that the Government is actually getting more from the 45 per cent that the American collectors turn over to it than it got formerly when it took the entire revenue. It is enabling the poor harassed people of Santo Domingo once more to turn their attention to industry and to be free from the curse of interminable revolutionary disturbance. It offers to all bona fide creditors, American and European, the only really good chance to obtain that to which they are justly entitled, while it in return gives to Santo Domingo the only opportunity of defense against claims which it ought not to pay, for now if it meets the views of the Senate we shall ourselves thoroughly examine all these claims, whether American or foreign, and see that none that are improper are paid. There is, of course, opposition to the treaty from dishonest creditors, foreign and American, and from the professional revolutionists of the island itself. We have already reason to believe that some of the creditors who do not dare expose their claims to honest scrutiny are endeavoring to stir up sedition in the island and opposition to the treaty. In the meantime I have exercised the authority vested in me by the joint resolution of the Congress to prevent the introduction of arms into the island for revolutionary purposes.

Under the course taken, stability and order and all the benefits of peace are at last coming to Santo Domingo, danger of foreign intervention has been suspended, and there is at last a prospect that all creditors will get justice, no more and no less. If the arrangement is terminated by the failure of the treaty chaos will follow; and if chaos follows, sooner or later this Government may be involved in serious difficulties with foreign governments over the island, or else may be forced itself to intervene in the island in some unpleasant fashion. Under the proposed treaty the independence of the island is scrupulously respected, the danger of violation of the Monroe Doctrine by the intervention of foreign powers vanishes, and the interference of our Government is minimized, so that we shall only act in conjunction with the Santo Domingo authorities to secure the proper administration of the customs, and therefore to secure the payment of just debts and to secure the Dominican Government against demands for unjust debts. The proposed method will give the people of Santo Domingo the same chance to move onward and upward which we have already given to the people of Cuba. It will be doubly to our discredit as a nation if we fail to take advantage of this chance; for it will be of damage to ourselves, and it will be of incalculable damage to Santo Domingo. Every consideration of wise policy, and, above all, every consideration of large generosity, bids us meet the request of Santo Domingo as we are now trying to meet it.

ARMY AND NAVY.

We cannot consider the question of our foreign policy without at the same time treating of the Army and the Navy. We now have a very small army—indeed, one well-nigh infinitesimal when compared with the army of any other large nation. Of course the Army we do have should be as nearly perfect of its kind and for its size as is possible. I do not believe that any army in the world has a better average of enlisted man or a better type of junior officer; but the Army should be trained to act effectively in a mass. Provision should be made by sufficient appropriations for maneuvers of a practical kind so that the troops may learn how to take care of themselves under actual service conditions; every march, for instance, being made with the soldier loaded exactly as he would be in an active campaign. The generals and colonels would thereby have opportunity of handling regiments, brigades, and divisions, and the commissary and medical departments would be tested in the field. Provision should be made for the exercise at least of a brigade and by preference of a division in marching and embarking at some point on our coast and disembarking at some other point and continuing its march. The number of posts in which the Army is kept in time of peace should be materially diminished and the posts that are left made correspondingly larger. No local interests should be allowed to stand in the way of assembling the greater part of the troops which would at need form our field armies in stations of such size as will permit the best training to be given to the personnel of all grades, including the high officers and staff officers. To accomplish this end we must have not company or regimental garrisons, but brigade and division garrisons. Promotion by mere seniority can never result in a thoroughly efficient corps of officers in the higher ranks unless there accompanies it a vigorous weeding-out process. Such a weeding-out process—that is, such a process of selection—is a chief feature of the four years' course of the young officer at West Point. There is no good reason why it should stop immediately upon his graduation. While at West Point he is dropped unless he comes up to a certain standard of excellence, and when he graduates he takes rank in the Army according to his rank of graduation. The results are good at West Point; and there should be in the Army itself something that will achieve the same end. After a certain age has been reached the average officer is unfit to do good work below a certain grade. Provision should be made for the promotion of exceptionally meritorious men over the heads of their comrades and for the retirement of all men who have reached a given age without getting beyond a given rank; this age of retirement of course changing from rank to rank. In both the Army and the Navy there should be some principle of selection, that is of promotion for merit, and there should be a resolute effort to eliminate the aged officers of reputable character who possess no special efficiency.

There should be an increase in the coast artillery force, so that our coast fortifications can be in some degree adequately manned. There is special need for an increase and reorganization of the Medical Department of the Army. In both the Army and Navy there must be the same thorough training for duty in the staff corps as in the fighting line. Only by such training in advance can we be sure that in actual war field operations and those at sea will be carried on successfully. The importance of this was shown conclusively in the Spanish-American and the Russo-Japanese wars. The work of the medical departments in the Japanese army and navy is especially worthy of study. I renew my recommendation of January 9, 1905, as to the Medical Department of the Army and call attention to the equal importance of the needs of the staff corps of the Navy. In the Medical Department of the Navy the first in importance is the reorganization of the Hospital Corps, on the lines of the Gallinger Bill (S. 3984, February 1, 1904), and the reapportionment of the different grades of the medical officers to meet service requirements. It seems advisable also that medical officers of the Army and Navy should have similar rank and pay in their respective grades, so that their duties can be carried on without friction when they are brought together. The base hospitals of the Navy should be put in condition to meet modern requirements and hospital ships be provided. Unless we now provide with ample forethought for the medical needs of the Army and Navy appalling suffering of a preventable kind is sure to occur if ever the country goes to war. It is not reasonable to expect successful administration in time of war of a department which lacks a third of the number of officers necessary to perform the medical service in time of peace. We need men who are not merely doctors; they must be trained in the administration of military medical service.

Our Navy must, relatively to the navies of other nations, always be of greater size than our Army. We have most wisely continued for a number of years to build up our Navy, and it has now reached a fairly high standard of efficiency. This standard of efficiency must not only be maintained, but increased. It does not seem to me necessary, however, that the Navy should—at least in the immediate future—be increased beyond the present number of units. What is now clearly necessary is to substitute efficient for inefficient units as the latter become worn-out or as it becomes apparent that they are useless. Probably the result would be attained by adding a single battle ship to our Navy each year, the superseded or outworn vessels being laid up or broken up as they are thus replaced. The four single-turret monitors built immediately after the close of the Spanish war, for instance, are vessels which would be of but little use in the event of war. The money spent upon them could have been more usefully spent in other ways. Thus it would have been far better never to have built a single one of these monitors and to have put the money into an ample supply of reserve guns. Most of the smaller cruisers and gunboats, though they serve a useful purpose so far as they are needed for international police work, would not add to the strength of our Navy in a conflict with a serious foe. There is urgent need of providing a large increase in the number of officers, and especially in the number of enlisted men.

Recent naval history has emphasized certain lessons which ought not to, but which do, need emphasis. Seagoing torpedo boats or destroyers are indispensable, not only for making night attacks by surprise upon an enemy, but even in battle for finishing already crippled ships. Under exceptional circumstances submarine boats would doubtless be of use. Fast scouts are needed. The main strength of the Navy, however, lies and can only lie in the great battle ships, the heavily-armored, heavily-gunned vessels which decide the mastery of the seas. Heavy-armed cruisers also play a most useful part, and unarmed cruisers, if swift enough, are very useful as scouts. Between antagonists of approximately equal prowess the comparative perfection of the instruments of war will ordinarily determine the fight. But it is of course true that the man behind the gun, the man in the engine room, and the man in the conning tower, considered not only individually, but especially with regard to the way in which they work together, are even more important than the weapons with which they work. The most formidable battle ship is of course helpless against even a light cruiser if the men aboard it are unable to hit anything with their guns; and thoroughly well-handled cruisers may count seriously in an engagement with much superior vessels, if the men aboard the latter are ineffective, whether from lack of training or from any other cause. Modern war ships are most formidable mechanisms when well handled, but they are utterly useless when not well handled; and they can not be handled at all without long and careful training. This training can under no circumstance be given when once war has broken out. No fighting ship of the first class should ever be laid up save for necessary repairs; and her crew should be kept constantly exercised on the high seas, so that she may stand at the highest point of perfection. To put a new and untrained crew upon the most powerful battle ship and send it out to meet a formidable enemy is not only to invite but to insure disaster and disgrace. To improvise crews at the outbreak of a war, so far as the serious fighting craft are concerned, is absolutely hopeless. If the officers and men are not thoroughly skilled in, and have not been thoroughly trained to, their duties, it would be far better to keep the ships in port during hostilities than to send them against a formidable opponent, for the result could only be that they would be either sunk or captured. The marksmanship of our Navy is now on the whole in a gratifying condition, and there has been a great improvement in fleet practice. We need additional seamen; we need a large store of reserve guns; we need sufficient money for ample target practice, ample practice of every kind at sea. We should substitute for comparatively inefficient types—the old third-class battle ship Texas, the single-turreted monitors above mentioned, and indeed all the monitors and some of the old cruisers—efficient, modern, seagoing vessels. Seagoing torpedo-boat destroyers should be substituted for some of the smaller torpedo boats. During the present Congress there need be no additions to the aggregate number of units of the Navy. Our Navy, though very small relatively to the navies of other nations, is for the present sufficient in point of numbers for our needs, and while we must constantly strive to make its efficiency higher, there need be no additions to the total number of ships now built and building, save in the way of substitution as above outlined. I recommend the report of the Secretary of the Navy to the careful consideration of the Congress, especially with a view to the legislation therein advocated.

NATURALIZATION LAWS.

During the past year evidence has accumulated to confirm the expressions contained in my last two annual Messages as to the importance of revising by appropriate legislation our system of naturalizing aliens. I appointed last March a commission to make a careful examination of our naturalization laws, and to suggest appropriate measures to avoid the notorious abuses resulting from the improvident or unlawful granting of citizenship. This commission, composed of an officer of the Department of State, of the Department of Justice, and of the Department of Commerce and Labor, has discharged the duty imposed upon it, and has submitted a report, which will be transmitted to the Congress for its consideration, and, I hope, for its favorable action.

The distinguishing recommendations of the Commission are:

First. A Federal bureau of naturalization, to be established in the Department of Commerce and Labor, to supervise the administration of the naturalization laws and to receive returns of naturalizations pending and accomplished.

Second. Uniformity of naturalization certificates, fees to be charged, and procedure.

Third. More exacting qualifications for citizenship.

Fourth. The preliminary declaration of intention to be abolished and no alien to be naturalized until at least ninety days after the filing of his petition.

Fifth. Jurisdiction to naturalize aliens to be confined to United States district courts and to such State courts as have jurisdiction in civil actions in which the amount in controversy is unlimited; in cities of over 100,000 inhabitants the United States district courts to have exclusive jurisdiction in the naturalization of the alien residents of such cities.

CRIMINAL LAWS.

In my last Message I asked the attention of the Congress to the urgent need of action to make our criminal law more effective; and I most earnestly request that you pay heed to the report of the Attorney-General on this subject. Centuries ago it was especially needful to throw every safeguard round the accused. The danger then was lest he should be wronged by the state. The danger is now exactly the reverse. Our laws and customs tell immensely in favor of the criminal and against the interests of the public he has wronged. Some antiquated and outworn rules which once safeguarded the threatened rights of private citizens, now merely work harm to the general body politic. The criminal law of the United States stands in urgent need of revision. The criminal process of any court of the United States should run throughout the entire territorial extent of our country. The delays of the criminal law, no less than of the civil, now amount to a very great evil.

BREACHES OF TRUST IN PUBLIC SERVICE.

There seems to be no statute of the United States which provides for the punishment of a United States attorney or other officer of the Government who corruptly agrees to wrongfully do or wrongfully refrain from doing any act when the consideration for such corrupt agreement is other than one possessing money value. This ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation. Legislation should also be enacted to cover, explicitly, unequivocally and beyond question, breach of trust in the shape of prematurely divulging official secrets by an officer or employee of the United States, and to provide a suitable penalty therefor. Such officer or employee owes the duty to the United States to guard carefully and not to divulge or in any manner use, prematurely, information which is accessible to the officer or employee by reason of his official position. Most breaches of public trust are already covered by the law, and this one should be. It is impossible, no matter how much care is used, to prevent the occasional appointment to the public service of a man who when tempted proves unfaithful; but every means should be provided to detect and every effort made to punish the wrongdoer. So far as in my power lies each and every such wrongdoer shall be relentlessly hunted down; in no instance in the past has he been spared; in no instance in the future shall he be spared. His crime is a crime against every honest man in the Nation, for it is a crime against the whole body politic. Yet in dwelling on such misdeeds, it is unjust not to add that they are altogether exceptional, and that on the whole the employees of the Government render upright and faithful service to the people. There are exceptions, notably in one or two branches of the service; but at no time in the Nation's history has the public service of the Nation taken as a whole stood on a higher plane than now, alike as regards honesty and as regards efficiency.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Once again I call your attention to the condition of the public-land laws. Recent developments have given new urgency to the need for such changes as will fit these laws to actual present conditions. The honest disposal and right use of the remaining public lands is of fundamental importance. The iniquitous methods by which the monopolizing of the public lands is being brought about under the present laws are becoming more generally known, but the existing laws do not furnish effective remedies. The recommendations of the Public Lands Commission upon this subject are wise and should be given effect.

The creation of small irrigated farms under the Reclamation Act is a powerful offset to the tendency of certain other laws to foster or permit monopoly of the land. Under that act the construction of great irrigation works has been proceeding rapidly and successfully, the lands reclaimed are eagerly taken up, and the prospect that the policy of national irrigation will accomplish all that was expected of it is bright. The act should be extended to include the State of Texas.

The Reclamation Act derives much of its value from the fact that it tends to secure the greatest possible number of homes on the land, and to create communities of freeholders, in part by settlement on public land, in part by forcing the subdivision of large private holdings before they can get water from Government irrigation works. The law requires that no right to the use of water for land in private ownership shall be sold for a tract exceeding 160 acres to any one land owner. This provision has excited active and powerful hostility, but the success of the law itself depends on the wise and firm enforcement of it. We can not afford to substitute tenants for freeholders on the public domain.

The greater part of the remaining public lands can not be irrigated. They are at present and will probably always be of greater value for grazing than for any other purpose. This fact has led to the grazing homestead of 640 acres in Nebraska and to the proposed extension of it to other States. It is argued that a family can not be supported on 160 acres of arid grazing land. This is obviously true; but neither can a family be supported on 640 acres of much of the land to which it is proposed to apply the grazing homestead. To establish universally any such arbitrary limit would be unwise at the present time. It would probably result on the one hand in enlarging the holdings of some of the great land owners, and on the other in needless suffering and failure on the part of a very considerable proportion of the bona fide settlers who give faith to the implied assurance of the Government that such an area is sufficient. The best use of the public grazing lands requires the careful examination and classification of these lands in order to give each settler land enough to support his family and no more. While this work is being done, and until the lands are settled, the Government should take control of the open range, under reasonable regulations suited to local needs, following the general policy already in successful operation on the forest reserves. It is probable that the present grazing value of the open public range is scarcely more than half what it once was or what it might easily be again under careful regulation.

The forest policy of the Administration appears to enjoy the unbroken support of the people. The great users of timber are themselves forwarding the movement for forest preservation. All organized opposition to the forest reserves in the West has disappeared. Since the consolidation of all Government forest work in the National Forest Service there has been a rapid and notable gain in the usefulness of the forest reserves to the people and in public appreciation of their value. The national parks within or adjacent to forest reserves should be transferred to the charge of the Forest Service also.

MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

The National Government already does something in connection with the construction and maintenance of the great system of levees along the lower course of the Mississippi; in my judgment it should do much more.

MERCHANT MARINE.

To the spread of our trade in peace and the defense of our flag in war a great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensable. We should have ships of our own and seamen of our own to convey our goods to neutral markets, and in case of need to reenforce our battle line. It can not but be a source of regret and uneasiness to us that the lines of communication with our sister republics of South America should be chiefly under foreign control. It is not a good thing that American merchants and manufacturers should have to send their goods and letters to South America via Europe if they wish security and dispatch. Even on the Pacific, where our ships have held their own better than on the Atlantic, our merchant flag is now threatened through the liberal aid bestowed by other governments on their own steam lines. I ask your earnest consideration of the report with which the Merchant Marine Commission has followed its long and careful inquiry.

JAMESTOWN TERCENTENNIAL.

I again heartily commend to your favorable consideration the tercentennial celebration of the settlement at Jamestown, Virginia. Appreciating the desirability of this commemoration, the Congress passed an act, March 3, 1905, authorizing in the year 1907, on and near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, an international naval, marine, and military celebration in honor of this event. By the authority vested in me by this act, I have made proclamation of said celebration, and have issued, in conformity with its instructions, invitations to all the nations of the earth to participate, by sending their naval vessels and such military organizations as may be practicable. This celebration would fail of its full purpose unless it were enduring in its results and commensurate with the importance of the event to be celebrated, the event from which our Nation dates its birth. I earnestly hope that this celebration, already indorsed by the Congress of the United States, and by the legislatures of sixteen States since the action of the Congress, will receive such additional aid at your hands as will make it worthy of the great event it is intended to celebrate, and thereby enable the Government of the United States to make provision for the exhibition of its own resources, and likewise enable our people who have undertaken the work of such a celebration to provide suitable and proper entertainment and instruction in the historic events of our country for all who may visit the exposition and to whom we have tendered our hospitality.

PENSIONS.

It is a matter of unmixed satisfaction once more to call attention to the excellent work of the Pension Bureau; for the veterans of the civil war have a greater claim upon us than any other class of our citizens. To them, first of all among our people, honor is due.

Seven years ago my lamented predecessor, President McKinley, stated that the time had come for the Nation to care for the graves of the Confederate dead. I recommend that the Congress take action towards this end. The first need is to take charge of the graves of the Confederate dead who died in Northern prisons.

IMMIGRATION.

The question of immigration is of vital interest to this country. In the year ending June 30, 1905, there came to the United States 1,026,000 alien immigrants. In other words, in the single year that has just elapsed there came to this country a greater number of people than came here during the one hundred and sixty-nine years of our colonial life which intervened between the first landing at Jamestown and the Declaration of Independence. It is clearly shown in the report of the Commissioner-General of Immigration that while much of this enormous immigration is undoubtedly healthy and natural, a considerable proportion is undesirable from one reason or another; moreover, a considerable proportion of it, probably a very large proportion, including most of the undesirable class, does not come here of its own initiative, but because of the activity of the agents of the great transportation companies. These agents are distributed throughout Europe, and by the offer of all kinds of inducements they wheedle and cajole many immigrants, often against their best interest, to come here. The most serious obstacle we have to encounter in the effort to secure a proper regulation of the immigration to these shores arises from the determined opposition of the foreign steamship lines, who have no interest whatever in the matter save to increase the returns on their capital by carrying masses of immigrants hither in the steerage quarters of their ships.

As I said in my last Message to the Congress, we can not have too much immigration of the right sort, and we should have none whatever of the wrong sort. Of course it is desirable that even the right kind of immigration should be properly distributed in this country. We need more of such immigration for the South; and special effort should be made to secure it. Perhaps it would be possible to limit the number of immigrants allowed to come in any one year to New York and other northern cities, while leaving unlimited the number allowed to come to the South; always provided, however, that a stricter effort is made to see that only immigrants of the right kind come to our country anywhere. In actual practice it has proved so difficult to enforce the immigration laws where long stretches of frontier marked by an imaginary line alone intervene between us and our neighbors that I recommend that no immigrants be allowed to come in from Canada and Mexico, save natives of the two countries themselves. As much as possible should be done to distribute the immigrants upon the land and keep them away from the congested tenement-house districts of the great cities. But distribution is a palliative, not a cure. The prime need is to keep out all immigrants who will not make good American citizens. The laws now existing for the exclusion of undesirable immigrants should be strengthened. Adequate means should be adopted, enforced by sufficient penalties, to compel steamship companies engaged in the passenger business to observe in good faith the law which forbids them to encourage or solicit immigration to the United States. Moreover, there should be a sharp limitation imposed upon all vessels coming to our ports as to the number of immigrants in ratio to the tonnage which each vessel can carry. This ratio should be high enough to insure the coming hither of as good a class of aliens as possible. Provision should be made for the surer punishment of those who induce aliens to come to this country under promise or assurance of employment. It should be made possible to inflict a sufficiently heavy penalty on any employer violating this law to deter him from taking the risk. It seems to me wise that there should be an international conference held to deal with this question of immigration, which has more than a merely national significance; such a conference could among other things enter at length into the methods for securing a thorough inspection of would-be immigrants at the ports from which they desire to embark before permitting them to embark.

In dealing with this question it is unwise to depart from the old American tradition and to discriminate for or against any man who desires to come here and become a citizen, save on the ground of that man's fitness for citizenship. It is our right and duty to consider his moral and social quality. His standard of living should be such that he will not, by pressure of competition, lower the standard of living of our own wage-workers; for it must ever be a prime object of our legislation to keep high their standard of living. If the man who seeks to come here is from the moral and social standpoint of such a character as to bid fair to add value to the community he should be heartily welcomed. We can not afford to pay heed to whether he is of one creed or another, of one nation or another. We can not afford to consider whether he is Catholic or Protestant, Jew or Gentile; whether he is Englishman or Irishman, Frenchman or German, Japanese, Italian, Scandinavian, Slav, or Magyar. What we should desire to find out is the individual quality of the individual man. In my judgment, with this end in view, we shall have to prepare through our own agents a far more rigid inspection in the countries from which the immigrants come. It will be a great deal better to have fewer immigrants, but all of the right kind, than a great number of immigrants, many of whom are necessarily of the wrong kind. As far as possible we wish to limit the immigration to this country to persons who propose to become citizens of this country, and we can well afford to insist upon adequate scrutiny of the character of those who are thus proposed for future citizenship. There should be an increase in the stringency of the laws to keep out insane, idiotic, epileptic, and pauper immigrants. But this is by no means enough. Not merely the anarchist, but every man of anarchistic tendencies, all violent and disorderly people, all people of bad character, the incompetent, the lazy, the vicious, the physically unfit, defective, or degenerate should be kept out. The stocks out of which American citizenship is to be built should be strong and healthy, sound in body, mind, and character. If it be objected that the Government agents would not always select well, the answer is that they would certainly select better than do the agents and brokers of foreign steamship companies, the people who now do whatever selection is done.

The questions arising in connection with Chinese immigration stand by themselves. The conditions in China are such that the entire Chinese coolie class, that is, the class of Chinese laborers, skilled and unskilled, legitimately come under the head of undesirable immigrants to this country, because of their numbers, the low wages for which they work, and their low standard of living. Not only is it to the interest of this country to keep them out, but the Chinese authorities do not desire that they should be admitted. At present their entrance is prohibited by laws amply adequate to accomplish this purpose. These laws have been, are being, and will be, thoroughly enforced. The violations of them are so few in number as to be infinitesimal and can be entirely disregarded. There is no serious proposal to alter the immigration law as regards the Chinese laborer, skilled or unskilled, and there is no excuse for any man feeling or affecting to feel the slightest alarm on the subject.

But in the effort to carry out the policy of excluding Chinese laborers, Chinese coolies, grave injustice and wrong have been done by this Nation to the people of China, and therefore ultimately to this Nation itself. Chinese students, business and professional men of all kinds—not only merchants, but bankers, doctors, manufacturers, professors, travelers, and the like—should be encouraged to come here and treated on precisely the same footing that we treat students, business men, travelers, and the like of other nations. Our laws and treaties should be framed, not so as to put these people in the excepted classes, but to state that we will admit all Chinese, except Chinese of the coolie class, Chinese skilled or unskilled laborers. There would not be the least danger that any such provision would result in any relaxation of the law about laborers. These will, under all conditions, be kept out absolutely. But it will be more easy to see that both justice and courtesy are shown, as they ought to be shown, to other Chinese, if the law or treaty is framed as above suggested. Examinations should be completed at the port of departure from China. For this purpose there should be provided a more adequate consular service in China than we now have. The appropriations, both for the offices of the consuls and for the office forces in the consulates, should be increased.

As a people we have talked much of the open door in China, and we expect, and quite rightly intend to insist upon, justice being shown us by the Chinese. But we can not expect to receive equity unless we do equity. We can not ask the Chinese to do to us what we are unwilling to do to them. They would have a perfect right to exclude our laboring men if our laboring men threatened to come into their country in such numbers as to jeopardize the well-being of the Chinese population; and as, mutatis mutandis, these were the conditions with which Chinese immigration actually brought this people face to face, we had and have a perfect right, which the Chinese Government in no way contests, to act as we have acted in the matter of restricting coolie immigration. That this right exists for each country was explicitly acknowledged in the last treaty between the two countries. But we must treat the Chinese student, traveler, and business man in a spirit of the broadest justice and courtesy if we expect similar treatment to be accorded to our own people of similar rank who go to China. Much trouble has come during the past summer from the organized boycott against American goods which has been started in China. The main factor in producing this boycott has been the resentment felt by the students and business people of China, by all the Chinese leaders, against the harshness of our law toward educated Chinamen of the professional and business classes.

This Government has the friendliest feeling for China and desires China's well-being. We cordially sympathize with the announced purpose of Japan to stand for the integrity of China. Such an attitude tends to the peace of the world.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The civil service law has been on the statute books for twenty-two years. Every President and a vast majority of heads of departments who have been in office during that period have favored a gradual extension of the merit system. The more thoroughly its principles have been understood, the greater has been the favor with which the law has been regarded by administrative officers. Any attempt to carry on the great executive departments of the Government without this law would inevitably result in chaos. The Civil Service Commissioners are doing excellent work; and their compensation is inadequate considering the service they perform.

The statement that the examinations are not practical in character is based on a misapprehension of the practice of the Commission. The departments are invariably consulted as to the requirements desired and as to the character of questions that shall be asked. General invitations are frequently sent out to all heads of departments asking whether any changes in the scope or character of examinations are required. In other words, the departments prescribe the requirements and the qualifications desired, and the Civil Service Commission cooperates with them in securing persons with these qualifications and insuring open and impartial competition. In a large number of examinations (as, for example, those for trades positions) there are no educational requirements whatever, and a person who can neither read nor write may pass with a high average. Vacancies in the service are filled with reasonable expedition and the machinery of the Commission, which reaches every part of the country, is the best agency that has yet been devised for finding people with the most suitable qualifications for the various offices to be filled. Written competitive examinations do not make an ideal method for filling positions, but they do represent an immeasurable advance upon the "spoils" method, under which outside politicians really make the appointments nominally made by the executive officers, the appointees being chosen by the politicians in question, in the great majority of cases, for reasons totally unconnected with the needs of the service or of the public.

Statistics gathered by the Census Bureau show that the tenure of office in the Government service does not differ materially from that enjoyed by employees of large business corporations. Heads of executive departments and members of the Commission have called my attention to the fact that the rule requiring a filing of charges and three days' notice before an employee could be separated from the service for inefficiency has served no good purpose whatever, because that is not a matter upon which a hearing of the employee found to be inefficient can be of any value, and in practice the rule providing for such notice and hearing has merely resulted in keeping in a certain number of incompetents, because of the reluctance of heads of departments and bureau chiefs to go through the required procedure. Experience has shown that this rule is wholly ineffective to save any man, if a superior for improper reasons wishes to remove him, and is mischievous because it sometimes serves to keep in the service incompetent men not guilty of specific wrong-doing. Having these facts in view, the rule has been amended by providing that where the inefficiency or incapacity comes within the personal knowledge of the head of a department the removal may be made without notice, the reasons therefor being filed and made a record of the department. The absolute right of removal rests where it always has rested, with the head of a department; any limitation of this absolute right results in grave injury to the public service. The change is merely one of procedure; it was much needed; and it is producing good results.

The civil service law is being energetically and impartially enforced, and in the large majority of cases complaints of violations of either the law or rules are discovered to be unfounded. In this respect, the law compares very favorably with any other Federal statute. The question of politics in the appointment and retention of the men engaged in merely ministerial work has been practically eliminated in almost the entire field of Government employment covered by the civil service law. The action of the Congress in providing the Commission with its own force instead of requiring it to rely on detailed clerks has been justified by the increased work done at a smaller cost to the Government. I urge upon the Congress a careful consideration of the recommendations contained in the annual report of the Commission.

COPYRIGHT LAWS.

Our copyright laws urgently need revision. They are imperfect in definition, confused and inconsistent in expression; they omit provision for many articles which, under modern reproductive processes, are entitled to protection; they impose hardships upon the copyright proprietor which are not essential to the fair protection of the public; they are difficult for the courts to interpret and impossible for the Copyright Office to administer with satisfaction to the public. Attempts to improve them by amendment have been frequent, no less than twelve acts for the purpose having been passed since the Revised Statutes. To perfect them by further amendment seems impracticable. A complete revision of them is essential. Such a revision, to meet modern conditions, has been found necessary in Germany, Austria, Sweden, and other foreign countries, and bills embodying it are pending in England and the Australian colonies. It has been urged here, and proposals for a commission to undertake it have, from time to time, been pressed upon the Congress. The inconveniences of the present conditions being so great, an attempt to frame appropriate legislation has been made by the Copyright Office, which has called conferences of the various interests especially and practically concerned with the operation of the copyright laws. It has secured from them suggestions as to the changes necessary; it has added from its own experience and investigations, and it has drafted a bill which embodies such of these changes and additions as, after full discussion and expert criticism, appeared to be sound and safe. In form this bill would replace the existing insufficient and inconsistent laws by one general copyright statute. It will be presented to the Congress at the coming session. It deserves prompt consideration.

ADULTERATION OF FOODS.

I recommend that a law be enacted to regulate interstate commerce in misbranded and adulterated foods, drinks, and drugs. Such law would protect legitimate manufacture and commerce, and would tend to secure the health and welfare of the consuming public. Traffic in foodstuffs which have been debased or adulterated so as to injure health or to deceive purchasers should be forbidden.

SMOKE LAW.

The law forbidding the emission of dense black or gray smoke in the city of Washington has been sustained by the courts. Something has been accomplished under it, but much remains to be done if we would preserve the Capital City from defacement by the smoke nuisance. Repeated prosecutions under the law have not had the desired effect. I recommend that it be made more stringent by increasing both the minimum and maximum fine; by providing for imprisonment in cases of repeated violation; and by affording the remedy of injunction against the continuation of the operation of plants which are persistent offenders. I recommend, also, an increase in the number of inspectors, whose duty it shall be to detect violations of the act.

NATIONAL PARKS.

I call your attention to the generous act of the State of California in conferring upon the United States Government the ownership of the Yosemite Valley and the Mariposa Big Tree Grove. There should be no delay in accepting the gift, and appropriations should be made for the including thereof in the Yosemite National Park, and for the care and policing of the park. California has acted most wisely as well as with great magnanimity in the matter. There are certain mighty natural features of our land which should be preserved in perpetuity for our children and our children's children. In my judgment the Grand Canyon of the Colorado should be made into a national park. It is greatly to be wished that the State of New York should copy as regards Niagara what the State of California has done as regards the Yosemite. Nothing should be allowed to interfere with the preservation of Niagara Falls in all their beauty and majesty. If the State can not see to this then it is earnestly to be wished that she should be willing to turn it over to the National Government, which should in such case (if possible, in conjunction with the Canadian Government) assume the burden and responsibility of preserving unharmed Niagara Falls; just as it should gladly assume a similar burden and responsibility for the Yosemite National Park, and as it has already assumed them for the Yellowstone National Park. Adequate provision should be made by the Congress for the proper care and supervision of all these national parks. The boundaries of the Yellowstone National Park should be extended to the south and east to take in such portions of the abutting forest reservation as will enable the Government to protect the elk on their winter range.

The most characteristic animal of the western plains was the great shaggy-maned wild ox, the bison, commonly known as buffalo. Small fragments of herds exist in a domesticated state here and there, a few of them in the Yellowstone Park. Such a herd as that on the Flathead Reservation should not be allowed to go out of existence. Either on some reservation or on some forest reserve like the Wichita reserve and game refuge provision should be made for the preservation of such a herd. I believe that the scheme would be of economic advantage, for the robe of the buffalo is of high market value, and the same is true of the robe of the crossbred animals.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

I call your especial attention to the desirability of giving to the members of the Life-Saving Service pensions such as are given to firemen and policemen in all our great cities. The men in the Life-Saving Service continually and in the most matter of fact way do deeds such as make Americans proud of their country. They have no political influence; and they live in such remote places that the really heroic services they continually render receive the scantiest recognition from the public. It is unjust for a great nation like this to permit these men to become totally disabled or to meet death in the performance of their hazardous duty and yet to give them no sort of reward. If one of them serves thirty years of his life in such a position he should surely be entitled to retire on half pay, as a fireman or policeman does, and if he becomes totally incapacitated through accident or sickness or loses his health in the discharge of his duty he or his family should receive a pension just as any soldier should. I call your attention with especial earnestness to this matter because it appeals not only to our judgment but to our sympathy; for the people on whose behalf I ask it are comparatively few in number, render incalculable service of a particularly dangerous kind, and have no one to speak for them.

INDIANS.

During the year just past, the phase of the Indian question which has been most sharply brought to public attention is the larger legal significance of the Indian's induction into citizenship. This has made itself manifest not only in a great access of litigation in which the citizen Indian figures as a party defendant and in a more widespread disposition to levy local taxation upon his personalty, but in a decision of the United States Supreme Court which struck away the main prop on which has hitherto rested the Government's benevolent effort to protect him against the evils of intemperance. The court holds, in effect, that when an Indian becomes, by virtue of an allotment of land to him, a citizen of the State in which his land is situated, he passes from under Federal control in such matters as this, and the acts of the Congress prohibiting the sale or gift to him of intoxicants become substantially inoperative. It is gratifying to note that the States and municipalities of the West which have most at stake in the welfare of the Indians are taking up this subject and are trying to supply, in a measure at least, the abdication of its trusteeship forced upon the Federal Government. Nevertheless, I would urgently press upon the attention of the Congress the question whether some amendment of the internal-revenue laws might not be of aid in prosecuting those malefactors, known in the Indian country as "bootleggers," who are engaged at once in defrauding the United States Treasury of taxes and, what is far more important, in debauching the Indians by carrying liquors illicitly into territory still completely under Federal jurisdiction.

Among the crying present needs of the Indians are more day schools situated in the midst of their settlements, more effective instruction in the industries pursued on their own farms, and a more liberal extension of the field matron service, which means the education of the Indian women in the arts of home making. Until the mothers are well started in the right direction we can not reasonably expect much from the children who are soon to form an integral part of our American citizenship. Moreover, the excuse continually advanced by male adult Indians for refusing offers of remunerative employment at a distance from their homes is that they dare not leave their families too long out of their sight. One effectual remedy for this state of things is to employ the minds and strengthen the moral fiber of the Indian women—the end to which the work of the field matron is especially directed. I trust that the Congress will make its appropriations for Indian day schools and field matrons as generous as may consist with the other pressing demands upon its providence.

THE PHILIPPINES.

During the last year the Philippine Islands have been slowly recovering from the series of disasters which, since American occupation, have greatly reduced the amount of agricultural products below what was produced in Spanish times. The war, the rinderpest, the locusts, the drought, and the cholera have been united as causes to prevent a return of the prosperity much needed in the islands. The most serious is the destruction by the rinderpest of more than 75 per cent of the draft cattle, because it will take several years of breeding to restore the necessary number of these indispensable aids to agriculture. The Commission attempted to supply by purchase from adjoining countries the needed cattle, but the experiments made were unsuccessful. Most of the cattle imported were unable to withstand the change of climate and the rigors of the voyage and died from other diseases than rinderpest.

The income of the Philippine government has necessarily been reduced by reason of the business and agricultural depression in the islands, and the government has been obliged to exercise great economy to cut down its expenses, to reduce salaries, and in every way to avoid a deficit. It has adopted an internal-revenue law, imposing taxes on cigars, cigarettes, and distilled liquors, and abolishing the old Spanish industrial taxes. The law has not operated as smoothly as was hoped, and although its principle is undoubtedly correct, it may need amendments for the purpose of reconciling the people to its provisions. The income derived from it has partly made up for the reduction in customs revenue.

There has been a marked increase in the number of Filipinos employed in the civil service, and a corresponding decrease in the number of Americans. The government in every one of its departments has been rendered more efficient by elimination of undesirable material and the promotion of deserving public servants.

Improvements of harbors, roads, and bridges continue, although the cutting down of the revenue forbids the expenditure of any great amount from current income for these purposes. Steps are being taken, by advertisement for competitive bids, to secure the construction and maintenance of 1,000 miles of railway by private corporations under the recent enabling legislation of the Congress. The transfer of the friar lands, in accordance with the contract made some two years ago, has been completely effected, and the purchase money paid. Provision has just been made by statute for the speedy settlement in a special proceeding in the Supreme Court of controversies over the possession and title of church buildings and rectories arising between the Roman Catholic Church and schismatics claiming under ancient municipalities. Negotiations and hearings for the settlement of the amount due to the Roman Catholic Church for rent and occupation of churches and rectories by the Army of the United States are in progress, and it is hoped a satisfactory conclusion may be submitted to the Congress before the end of the session.

Tranquillity has existed during the past year throughout the Archipelago, except in the province of Cavite, the province of Batangas, and the province of Samar, and in the island of Jolo among the Moros. The Jolo disturbance was put an end to by several sharp and short engagements, and now peace prevails in the Moro province. Cavite, the mother of ladrones in the Spanish times, is so permeated with the traditional sympathy of the people for ladronism as to make it difficult to stamp out the disease. Batangas was only disturbed by reason of the fugitive ladrones from Cavite. Samar was thrown into disturbance by the uneducated and partly savage peoples living in the mountains, who, having been given by the municipal code more power than they were able to exercise discreetly, elected municipal officers who abused their trusts, compelled the people raising hemp to sell it at a much less price than it was worth, and by their abuses drove their people into resistance to constituted authority. Cavite and Samar are instances of reposing too much confidence in the self-governing power of a people. The disturbances have all now been suppressed, and it is hoped that with these lessons local governments can be formed which will secure quiet and peace to the deserving inhabitants. The incident is another proof of the fact that if there has been any error as regards giving self-government in the Philippines it has been in the direction of giving it too quickly, not too slowly. A year from next April the first legislative assembly for the islands will be held. On the sanity and self-restraint of this body much will depend so far as the future self-government of the islands is concerned.

The most encouraging feature of the whole situation has been the very great interest taken by the common people in education and the great increase in the number of enrolled students in the public schools. The increase was from 300,000 to half a million pupils. The average attendance is about 70 per cent. The only limit upon the number of pupils seems to be the capacity of the government to furnish teachers and schoolhouses.

The agricultural conditions of the islands enforce more strongly than ever the argument in favor of reducing the tariff on the products of the Philippine Islands entering the United States. I earnestly recommend that the tariff now imposed by the Dingley bill upon the products of the Philippine Islands be entirely removed, except the tariff on sugar and tobacco, and that that tariff be reduced to 25 per cent of the present rates under the Dingley Act; that after July 1, 1909, the tariff upon tobacco and sugar produced in the Philippine Islands be entirely removed, and that free trade between the islands and the United States in the products of each country then be provided for by law.

A statute in force, enacted April 15, 1904, suspends the operation of the coastwise laws of the United States upon the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States until July 1, 1906. I earnestly recommend that this suspension be postponed until July 1, 1909. I think it of doubtful utility to apply the coastwise laws to the trade between the United States and the Philippines under any circumstances, because I am convinced that it will do no good whatever to American bottoms, and will only interfere and be an obstacle to the trade between the Philippines and the United States; but if the coastwise law must be thus applied, certainly it ought not to have effect until free trade is enjoyed between the people of the United States and the people of the Philippine Islands in their respective products.

I do not anticipate that free trade between the islands and the United States will produce a revolution in the sugar and tobacco production of the Philippine Islands. So primitive are the methods of agriculture in the Philippine Islands, so slow is capital in going to the islands, so many difficulties surround a large agricultural enterprise in the islands, that it will be many, many years before the products of those islands will have any effect whatever upon the markets of the United States. The problem of labor is also a formidable one with the sugar and tobacco producers in the islands. The best friends of the Filipino people and the people themselves are utterly opposed to the admission of Chinese coolie labor. Hence the only solution is the training of Filipino labor, and this will take a long time. The enactment of a law by the Congress of the United States making provision for free trade between the islands and the United States, however, will be of great importance from a political and sentimental standpoint; and while its actual benefit has doubtless been exaggerated by the people of the islands, they will accept this measure of justice as an indication that the people of the United States are anxious to aid the people of the Philippine Islands in every way, and especially in the agricultural development of their Archipelago. It will aid the Filipinos without injuring interests in America.

HAWAII.

In my judgment immediate steps should be taken for the fortification of Hawaii. This is the most important point in the Pacific to fortify in order to conserve the interests of this country. It would be hard to overstate the importance of this need. Hawaii is too heavily taxed. Laws should be enacted setting aside for a period of, say, twenty years 75 per cent of the internal revenue and customs receipts from Hawaii as a special fund to be expended in the islands for educational and public buildings, and for harbor improvements and military and naval defenses. It can not be too often repeated that our aim must be to develop the Territory of Hawaii on traditional American lines. That Territory has serious commercial and industrial problems to reckon with; but no measure of relief can be considered which looks to legislation admitting Chinese and restricting them by statute to field labor and domestic service. The status of servility can never again be tolerated on American soil. We can not concede that the proper solution of its problems is special legislation admitting to Hawaii a class of laborers denied admission to the other States and Territories. There are obstacles, and great obstacles, in the way of building up a representative American community in the Hawaiian Islands; but it is not in the American character to give up in the face of difficulty. Many an American Commonwealth has been built up against odds equal to those that now confront Hawaii.

No merely half-hearted effort to meet its problems as other American communities have met theirs can be accepted as final. Hawaii shall never become a Territory in which a governing class of rich planters exists by means of coolie labor. Even if the rate of growth of the Territory is thereby rendered slower, the growth must only take place by the admission of immigrants fit in the end to assume the duties and burdens of full American citizenship. Our aim must be to develop the Territory on the same basis of stable citizenship as exists on this continent.

PORTO RICO.

I earnestly advocate the adoption of legislation which will explicitly confer American citizenship on all citizens of Porto Rico. There is, in my judgment, no excuse for failure to do this. The harbor of San Juan should be dredged and improved. The expenses of the Federal court of Porto Rico should be met from the Federal Treasury, and not from the Porto Rican treasury. The elections in Porto Rico should take place every four years, and the legislature should meet in session every two years. The present form of government in Porto Rico, which provides for the appointment by the President of the members of the executive council or upper house of the legislature, has proved satisfactory and has inspired confidence in property owners and investors. I do not deem it advisable at the present time to change this form in any material feature. The problems and needs of the island are industrial and commercial rather than political.

INSULAR AFFAIRS IN GENERAL.

I wish also to call the attention of the Congress to one question which affects our insular possessions generally; namely, the need of an increased liberality in the treatment of the whole franchise question in these islands. In the proper desire to prevent the islands being exploited by speculators and to have them develop in the interest of their own people an error has been made in refusing to grant sufficiently liberal terms to induce the investment of American capital in the Philippines and in Porto Rico. Elsewhere in this Message I have spoken strongly against the jealousy of mere wealth, and especially of corporate wealth as such. But it is particularly regrettable to allow any such jealousy to be developed when we are dealing either with our insular or with foreign affairs. The big corporation has achieved its present position in the business world simply because it is the most effective instrument in business competition. In foreign affairs we can not afford to put our people at a disadvantage with their competitors by in any way discriminating against the efficiency of our business organizations. In the same way we can not afford to allow our insular possessions to lag behind in industrial development from any twisted jealousy of business success. It is, of course, a mere truism to say that the business interests of the islands will only be developed if it becomes the financial interest of somebody to develop them. Yet this development is one of the things most earnestly to be wished for in the interest of the islands themselves. We have been paying all possible heed to the political and educational interests of the islands, but, important though these objects are, it is not less important that we should favor their industrial development. The Government can in certain ways help this directly, as by building good roads; but the fundamental and vital help must be given through the development of the industries of the islands, and a most efficient means to this end is to encourage big American corporations to start industries in them, and this means to make it advantageous for them to do so. To limit the ownership of mining claims as has been done in the Philippines is absurd. In both the Philippines and Porto Rico the limit of holdings of land should be largely raised.

ALASKA.

I earnestly ask that Alaska be given an elective Delegate. Some person should be chosen who can speak with authority of the needs of the Territory. The Government should aid in the construction of a railroad from the Gulf of Alaska to the Yukon River, in American territory. In my last two Messages I advocated certain additional action on behalf of Alaska. I shall not now repeat those recommendations, but I shall lay all my stress upon the one recommendation of giving to Alaska some one authorized to speak for it. I should prefer that the Delegate was made elective, but if this is not deemed wise then make him appointive. At any rate, give Alaska some person whose business it shall be to speak with authortiy on her behalf to the Congress. The natural resources of Alaska are great. Some of the chief needs of the peculiarly energetic, self-reliant, and typically American white population of Alaska were set forth in my last Message. I also earnestly ask your attention to the needs of the Alaskan Indians. All Indians who are competent should receive the full rights of American citizenship. It is, for instance, a gross and indefensible wrong to deny to such hard-working, decent-living Indians as the Metlakahtlas the right to obtain licenses as captains, pilots, and engineers, the right to enter mining claims, and to profit by the homestead law. These particular Indians are civilized, and are competent and entitled to be put on the same basis with the white men round about them.

ADMISSION TO STATEHOOD.

I recommend that Indian Territory and Oklahoma be admitted as one State and that New Mexico and Arizona be admitted as one State. There is no obligation upon us to treat territorial subdivisions, which are matters of convenience only, as binding us on the question of admission to statehood. Nothing has taken up more time in the Congress during the past few years than the question as to the statehood to be granted to the four Territories above mentioned, and after careful consideration of all that has been developed in the discussions of the question I recommend that they be immediately admitted as two States. There is no justification for further delay; and the advisability of making the four Territories into two States has been clearly established.

In some of the Territories the legislative assemblies issue licenses for gambling. The Congress should by law forbid this practice, the harmful results of which are obvious at a glance.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama, under which the construction of the Panama Canal was made possible, went into effect with its ratification by the United States Senate on February 23, 1904. The canal properties of the French Canal Company were transferred to the United States on April 23, 1904, on payment of $40,000,000 to that company. On April 1, 1905, the Commission was reorganized, and it now consists of Theodore P. Shonts, chairman, Charles E. Magoon, Benjamin M. Harrod, Rear-Admiral Mordecai T. Endicott, Brig. Gen. Peter C. Hains, and Col. Oswald H. Ernst. John F. Stevens was appointed chief engineer on July 1 last. Active work in canal construction, mainly preparatory, has been in progress for less than a year and a half. During that period two points about the canal have ceased to be open to debate. First, the question of route; the canal will be built on the Isthmus of Panama. Second, the question of feasibility; there are no physical obstacles on this route that American engineering skill will not be able to overcome without serious difficulty, or that will prevent the completion of the canal within a reasonable time and at a reasonable cost. This is virtually the unanimous testimony of the engineers who have investigated the matter for the Government.

The point which remains unsettled is the question of type, whether the canal shall be one of several locks above sea level, or at sea level with a single tide lock. On this point I hope to lay before the Congress at an early day the findings of the Advisory Board of American and European Engineers, that at my invitation have been considering the subject, together with the report of the Commission thereon; and such comments thereon or recommendations in reference thereto as may seem necessary.

The American people is pledged to the speediest possible construction of a canal adequate to meet the demands which the commerce of the world will make upon it, and I appeal most earnestly to the Congress to aid in the fulfillment of the pledge. Gratifying progress has been made during the past year and especially during the past four months. The greater part of the necessary preliminary work has been done. Actual work of excavation could be begun only on a limited scale till the Canal Zone was made a healthful place to live in and to work in. The Isthmus had to be sanitated first. This task has been so thoroughly accomplished that yellow fever has been virtually extirpated from the Isthmus and general health conditions vastly improved. The same methods which converted the island of Cuba from a pest hole, which menaced the health of the world, into a healthful place of abode, have been applied on the Isthmus with satisfactory results. There is no reason to doubt that when the plans for water supply, paving, and sewerage of Panama and Colon and the large labor camps have been fully carried out, the Isthmus will be, for the Tropics, an unusually healthy place of abode. The work is so far advanced now that the health of all those employed in canal work is as well guarded as it is on similar work in this country and elsewhere.

In addition to sanitating the Isthmus, satisfactory quarters are being provided for employees and an adequate system of supplying them with wholesome food at reasonable prices has been created. Hospitals have been established and equipped that are without superiors of their kind anywhere. The country has thus been made fit to work in, and provision has been made for the welfare and comfort of those who are to do the work. During the past year a large portion of the plant with which the work is to be done has been ordered. It is confidently believed that by the middle of the approaching year a sufficient proportion of this plant will have been installed to enable us to resume the work of excavation on a large scale.

What is needed now and without delay is an appropriation by the Congress to meet the current and accruing expenses of the Commission. The first appropriation of $10,000,000, out of the $135,000,000 authorized by the Spooner Act, was made three years ago. It is nearly exhausted. There is barely enough of it remaining to carry the Commission to the end of the year. Unless the Congress shall appropriate before that time all work must cease. To arrest progress for any length of time now, when matters are advancing so satisfactorily, would be deplorable. There will be no money with which to meet pay-roll obligations and none with which to meet bills coming due for materials and supplies; and there will be demoralization of the forces, here and on the Isthmus, now working so harmoniously and effectively, if there is delay in granting an emergency appropriation. Estimates of the amount necessary will be found in the accompanying reports of the Secretary of War and the Commission.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I recommend more adequate provision than has been made heretofore for the work of the Department of State. Within a few years there has been a very great increase in the amount and importance of the work to be done by that Department, both in Washington and abroad. This has been caused by the great increase of our foreign trade, the increase of wealth among our people, which enables them to travel more generally than heretofore, the increase of American capital which is seeking investment in foreign countries, and the growth of our power and weight in the councils of the civilized world. There has been no corresponding increase of facilities for doing the work afforded to the Department having charge of our foreign relations.

Neither at home nor abroad is there a sufficient working force to do the business properly. In many respects the system which was adequate to the work of twenty-five, or even ten, years ago, is inadequate now, and should be changed. Our consular force should be classified, and appointments should be made to the several classes, with authority to the Executive to assign the members of each class to duty at such posts as the interests of the service require, instead of the appointments being made as at present to specified posts. There should be an adequate inspection service, so that the Department may be able to inform itself how the business of each consulate is being done, instead of depending upon casual private information or rumor. The fee system should be entirely abolished, and a due equivalent made in salary to the officers who now eke out their subsistence by means of fees. Sufficient provision should be made for a clerical force in every consulate, composed entirely of Americans, instead of the insufficient provision now made, which compels the employment of great numbers of citizens of foreign countries whose services can be obtained for less money. At a large part of our consulates the office quarters and the clerical force are inadequate to the performance of the onerous duties imposed by the recent provisions of our immigration laws as well as by our increasing trade. In many parts of the world the lack of suitable quarters for our embassies, legations, and consulates detracts from the respect in which our officers ought to be held, and seriously impairs their weight and influence.

Suitable provision should be made for the expense of keeping our diplomatic officers more fully informed of what is being done from day to day in the progress of our diplomatic affairs with other countries. The lack of such information, caused by insufficient appropriations available for cable tolls and for clerical and messenger service, frequently puts our officers at a great disadvantage and detracts from their usefulness. The salary list should be readjusted. It does not now correspond either to the importance of the service to be rendered and the degrees of ability and experience required in the different positions, or to the differences in the cost of living. In many cases the salaries are quite inadequate.

RESOLUTIONS EXPRESSIVE OF SYMPATHY WITH THE SUFFERERS BY THE MASSACRES IN RUSSIA.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of this House that the resolutions I have introduced, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs when appointed, and which I trust I will have the opportunity to speak to at some later day, may be now read by the Clerk and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the resolutions shall be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and also printed in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, without knowing the nature of the resolutions, I do not like to establish such a precedent as this, where the gentleman asks simply that the resolutions be read. It is out of the ordinary and against the rules of the House. I do not know anything about the nature of the resolutions. If the gentleman will state in substance the nature of his resolutions, perhaps we can get along with it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I think after I have stated it the gentleman from New York will withdraw any objection he might otherwise make. The resolutions express the sympathy of the American people with the sufferers from the massacres in Russia.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection this once.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the American people respecting the recent massacres in Russia and extending their sympathy and requesting the President of the United States to use his good and friendly offices, etc.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the Members of this House learned with profound sorrow and feeling akin to horror of the persecution and massacres of the Jews in Russia. The American people, ever animated by the spirit of justice and humanity, and strongly imbued with the recognition of the brotherhood of man, which is the crowning glory of our civilization, stand aghast at the base intolerance of brutalized men who, without provocation, have, in this age of enlightenment, committed unspeakable atrocities and crimes against life and property that outrage every human feeling, evoke our condemnation, and shame the civilization of the world. The American people have been deeply stirred with pity for the unfortunate sufferers who have been plunged into a grief that beggars description, and tender them the expressions of their heartfelt sympathy.

Be it further resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested, if he finds it not incompatible with the public interests, to use such good and friendly offices with the Russian Government as the traditional and unbroken friendship between the two sections may justify, as may secure action by the Russian Government as may tend to prevent the recurrence of such outrages in the future.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the same may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 480 may be made the special order for to-morrow after the reading of the Journal, and that it may continue as such until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 480 and that the same shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 480) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, and making appropriations for Isthmian Canal construction, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, shall be subject to the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, the same as though said bonds were issued under the provisions of said act of March 14, 1900.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,500,000 to continue the construction of the Isthmian Canal, to be expended under the direction of the President in accordance with the said act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, approved June 28, 1902, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, the said sum to continue available until expended: Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902.

SEC. 3. That a detailed statement of the expenditures from this and subsequent appropriations for the construction of the Isthmian Canal shall be made annually to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of my colleague——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized?

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. To the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object and announcing I would object now, I want to make a request of the gentleman from Iowa. It is that he permit his request for unanimous consent to go over until to-morrow. I have not had time to scrutinize the bill, and if the request were pushed now I should undoubtedly object. Perhaps after scrutinizing it I may not, but I would request him to permit the request for unanimous consent to go over until to-morrow, until we have time to consider the matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi I modified the request that it was my purpose to make. I did intend to ask that the bill might now come up for consideration, but the gentleman having suggested that he desired to see the bill, I thought that I was complying with the substance of his request by asking that it be considered to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the gentleman from Iowa, if he will excuse me, must have misunderstood me. The request I made of him was to permit his request for unanimous consent to go over. Without further information, I am not certain whether I would or would not object. I know I will object now and I am inclined to think I might object to-morrow, but I want time to consider it. Perhaps I may not object, and if I do not it would facilitate the public business.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, with the statement so positively made that the gentleman would object now, I do not see that there is any alternative for me except to postpone my request until to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And to-morrow, when the gentleman prefers the request again, I will consider it on its merits.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama rose.

Mr. HEPBURN. In the meantime, in order that the bill may have——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] allow me a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman state whether or not the bill has been printed as yet?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I sent a few moments ago to get a copy of it, and I could not. It is a matter of very great importance, and we ought to have time to look into it. It has not been in the hands of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, because that committee has not been appointed as yet.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] whether it is his intention to ask unanimous consent to have the data printed also.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was about to say when I yielded to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], that I have a statement of the expenditures under the appropriation heretofore made, up to the 13th of September of this year. And I have also a statement of the estimates that are involved, in the sum of $16,500,000, covered by this sum which it is proposed to be appropriated.

Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill and these two papers be printed in the RECORD, so that the gentlemen can have them before them in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD, together with the two statements of the expenditures that have been made and the estimates that are thought to be essential. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest also that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] ask that those estimates be printed in the usual pamphlet form, for convenience, as well as in the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will ask that also.

The SPEAKER. To be printed as a document?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded that it would be printed as a document anyway.

Mr. PAYNE. If they are addressed to the Speaker of the House, they would be. And, if that is so, I will withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. WILIAMS. It ought to be printed in the RECORD anyhow.

Mr. PAYNE. I will withdraw the suggestion, on the statement of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that it be printed in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The reports are as follows:

E. S. BENSON, General Auditor.

REPRESENTATIVE ANTHONY MICHALEK.

Mr. RAINEY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege affecting this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have here a protest which I have just received, numerously signed by the citizens of the Fifth Congressional district of Illinois, protesting against being represented here in this body by ANTHONY MICHALEK, whom they allege is an alien. The petition is accompanied by affidavits, which certainly make at least a strong prima facie case.

I desire to present this petition now, and to accompany it with a resolution asking that the Speaker appoint a special committee of five to immediately investigate the claim made by these citizens of that district. I ask that the petition also be read. It is not a long one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the petition and resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the Fifty-ninth Congress of the United States of America:

The undersigned citizens and legal voters of the Fifth Congressional district of Illinois respectfully represent unto your honorable body that at the last Congressional election held in said district one ANTHONY MICHALEK was elected as a Member of the Fifty-ninth Congress; that since said election it has come to the notice of the undersigned that said ANTHONY MICHALEK was not at the time he was elected nor is he now a citizen of the United States.

Wherefore we protest against being represented in your honorable body by one who has not deemed it worth while to become a citizen of the United States, and respectfully petition your honorable body to cause an investigation to be made, and if it is found that said MICHALEK is not a citizen of the United States to take such action in the premises as to your honorable body shall seem fit and proper.

And in support of this petition we herewith submit the affidavits of Julius M. Kahn, Enoch P. Morgan, and Joseph Pejsar, which affidavits are made part of this petition, and we offer to produce other and additional testimony on any hearing ordered by your honorable body.

And we will every pray.

STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of Cook, ss:

Julius M. Kahn, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is an attorney at law, and resides at 729 East Fiftieth place, in the city of Chicago; that he is a native-born citizen of the United States, and that he is thoroughly familiar with the records of the courts of Cook County, in the State of Illinois, and a competent person to examine the records of the courts; that in said county there are four courts which have the power to naturalize citizens, namely: The circuit court, superior court, county court, and criminal court, and no other court in said Cook County has such power, and that no other court had such power for more than thirty years last past; that he has carefully examined the records of each and every one of said four courts for the purpose of ascertaining whether one Vaclav Michalek ever became a citizen of the United States; that he carefully examined the records beginning with the year 1879 and ending with the year 1890, both inclusive, and that there is no record in any of said courts showing that one Vaclav Michalek became a naturalized citizen during said period of time, and that during all of said period of time no one by the name of Michalek became a citizen in said Cook County, except one Michael Michalek, who became a citizen on March 26, 1888, by naturalization and judgment of the superior court of Cook County; that said Michael Michalek, as appears from said records, was a native of Germany, and not a native of Bohemia, Austria, and that he took the oath renouncing allegiance to the Emperor of Germany.

And this affiant says that after a thorough investigation of the records he finds that Vaclav Michalek was never naturalized in the County of Cook during said period of time.

Affiant further says that under the election laws of the State of Illinois each voter must register and answer under oath certain questions in regard to his qualifications as a voter, and that the record of each voter's answers is kept; that this affiant examined the records so kept in the election commissioners' office in the city of Chicago, County of Cook, and State of Illinois, and finds that ANTHONY MICHALEK, Congressman-elect from the Fifth Illinois district, registered in the Eighth precinct of the Eleventh Ward in said city in the year 1905, and that his sworn answers to questions propounded were that he, ANTHONY MICHALEK, was born in Bohemia, and that he became a citizen of the United States by act of Congress.

And further affiant saith not.

Josef Pejsar, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is and for about thirty-five years last past has been a citizen of the United States; that he has resided in the city of Chicago for about thirty-nine years last past; that he is a householder and resides and has resided for more than ten years last past at No. 3437 Lowe avenue, in the city of Chicago; that he is acquainted with ANTHONY MICHALEK, Congressman-elect from the Fifth Congressional district; that the name of the father of said Congressman-elect was Vaclav

Michalek; that said Vaclav Michalek was by occupation a brewer; that this affiant was also by occupation a brewer; that both of them were natives of Bohemia, Austria, and that both of them were employed by the Seipp Brewing Company, in the city of Chicago, and that this affiant was well acquainted with said Vaclav Michalek, father of said Congressman-elect; that said Vaclav Michalek arrived in this country in 1879 as an immigrant from Bohemia, and brought said ANTHONY MICHALEK, his son, with him; that he came direct to Chicago, and remained here until the time of his death; that he died in the year 1883, and that he had not been fully five years in this country at the time of his death, and that at the time of his death the said Vaclav Michalek was at least 40 years of age; and that the said Vaclav Michalek had never been in the United States prior to the year 1879. That at an election held in the city of Chicago a few months preceding the death of said Vaclav Michalek this affiant had a conversation with said Vaclav Michalek in the Bohemian language, in which conversation this affiant desired said Michalek to become interested in the coming election, and asked him to become a citizen of the United States, and make application for his first papers, but that said Vaclav Michalek answered that elections could get along without him, and that he was not and did not care to become a citizen of the United States for some time to come.

And further affiant saith not.

Resolved, That the protest of citizens of the Fifth Congressional district of Illinois against being represented in Congress by ANTHONY MICHALEK, declared by them to be an alien, be referred to a special committee of five Members of this House, to be appointed by the Speaker, for immediate investigation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out so much of the resolution as provides for the appointment of a special committee, and that the document be referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee of this House when appointed.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman his motion in writing, or will he indicate it to the Clerk?

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the resolution the words "a special committee of five members of this House, to be appointed by the Speaker, for immediate investigation" and insert "be referred by the Speaker to the appropriate committee of this House when appointed."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, what committee would the gentleman from Illinois consider the appropriate committee, under the peculiar circumstances?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the precedents in all these questions are to the effect that matters of this sort have been referred to the Committee on Elections. The Committee on Elections, of course, as now constituted, is in three branches. No such case as this, except the Roberts case, where a special committee was appointed, has come up since the Committee on Elections was divided into three branches, and my proposition is to leave that to the Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest further to the gentleman from Illinois that in the Roberts case the protest was made before the Member had been sworn in. I understand this gentleman has been sworn in as one of the Members of the House. The protest in the Roberts case was made at the time he presented himself to take the oath.

Mr. MANN. The ground of protest is entirely different, and at any rate it is entirely within the province of the House to refer this matter to a special committee, to a particular committee, or to a committee to be selected by the Speaker. It is wholly a matter for the House to determine for itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is peculiarly a matter of high House privilege, and it is a peculiar case. If this gentleman is not a naturalized citizen of the United States, he is not now and never has been a Member of the Congress of the United States, because nothing that we can do in the shape of swearing him in or receiving him would undo the inhibition that lies against any one who is an alien, and not a citizen of the United States, from becoming a Member of this House. It is not a matter of election at all. There is no dispute about the fact that he was elected. The sole question is one of naturalization or citizenship. There is no more reason why it should go to the Committee on Elections than to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. It seems to me it would be a proper course to appoint a special committee; and it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that view is the more reenforced by the gravity of the question to be considered. It is not only sui generis, but one of the gravest questions to be considered. A whole shelf of law books may be necessary to be consulted in determining the question as to whether this peculiar situation is a situation of citizenship or not. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his amendment and permit the Speaker to appoint a select committee, so that the work may be gotten at at once. That is one reason I can see why a special committee should be appointed on the subject, so that it may deal with it at once owing to its peculiar circumstances.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. This is evidently a matter that should be heard at once. How can it be referred to the Committee on Elections and considered at once when the Committee on Elections has not yet been appointed?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many bills emanating from the brilliant mind of my distinguished friend from Tennessee were introduced yesterday—undoubtedly some that ought to be acted on at once—but unfortunately the House and the country will be compelled to wait until the committees are appointed and shall have considered them before that solicitude can be removed.

Now, this matter is no more important than others. There are a great many precedents in reference to these contests in such cases. In the very first House of Representatives a contest was made on the ground that one of the Members elected was not a citizen, and it was referred to the Commtitee on Elections. There have been constant references upon the same ground to the Committee on Elections. I do not feel absolutely certain in my own mind whether it ought to be referred to the Committee on Elections or to the Committee on the Judiciary; but the precedents have been to refer these matters to the Committee on Elections.

It is true that when the Roberts case was before the House, under a peculiar situation, a select committee was appointed; but this Member has been sworn in. He is as much a Member of the House now as though his seat were regularly contested by his opponent at the election, and in the end he should be declared not elected, as often happens in the House. That he is entitled to his seat for the present, until this question can be decided, there can be no question.

I can see no objection to referring this to the appropriate committee, and I see no more reason why a special committee should be appointed to investigate this matter than why a special committee should be appointed to take up every bill that is introduced into the House. I must insist upon the amendment which I offer. If the gentleman desires to discuss it, how much time does he desire?

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to suggest, in connection with the resolution I have presented, that this is not a case of a contested election. The resolution raises no question as to whether or not Mr. MICHALEK received more votes than his opponent. The resolution raises a question under the Constitution of the United States, which provides expressly that in order to entitle a man to a seat in this body he must be a citizen of the United States, an inhabitant of the State from which he is elected, and that he must have been a citizen of the United States for the period of seven years.

Now, the elections committees are not appointed, none of them, and probably will not be for some time, and this is not a matter which comes peculiarly under their jurisdiction; but it is a matter which does affect not only the district that Mr. MICHALEK now assumes to represent in this body, but it affects all legislation to be passed upon by this body during the time he is permitted to vote here. Now, I insist that as a matter of good faith, and in order to preserve the privileges of this House, this matter ought to be referred to a special committee.

It will not occupy much time in its investigation. It is not a question as to what votes were cast for him, but the only question, and it is a simple one, is whether or not he is now a citizen of the United States.

The fact that he was sworn in yesterday can not make any difference. The fact that a man comes here and holds up his hand and takes the oath in this House does not establish his citizenship, and can never establish it; and until his citizenship is established, if contested, he is not entitled to a seat in this House, and it is a question that requires immediate investigation, and such investigation as only a special committee can give it.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the remainder of his time. The Chair recognizes the gentleman in front of the Chair [Mr. MANN], if he desires to be recognized.

Mr. MANN. I desire to ask whether my colleague [Mr. RAINEY] wishes to occupy any further time on this question?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I desire to occupy time later.

Mr. MANN. Well, I hope the gentleman will proceed now. So far as I know, I shall ask for a vote.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] if he desires time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not desire to say anything. I did desire to say just about what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has said.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. PARKER. Two minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is purely a question of an election. If votes are cast at an election for a person who is eligible, they are valid votes. If they are cast for a person who is absolutely ineligible, the votes are void, and some one else is elected. At least it would seem to me that it might be contended that that was so. It can not be insisted that because votes are cast for somebody who is ineligible, therefore the votes cast for somebody else shall be disregarded. Now that is one point that would make it a question fairly to go to an election committee. Another point, however, would be as to whether this question of citizenship can now be raised. Should not the question be raised when the certificate of election is made out when the votes are counted? When that is once passed, and the man without objection comes and takes his oath as a citizen to support the Constitution of the United States, there is a great deal of question as to whether that matter can come up again; and so I think this, like all other questions pertaining to an election, should go to an elections committee. Therefore I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if I may be recognized——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]?

Mr. OLMSTED. Two minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the provision of the sixtieth paragraph of Rule XI, giving to the committees on elections the right to report at any time on any matter "touching the right of a Member to his seat."

This is surely such a matter as that, and therefore clearly within the province of the elections committee of the House. Of course it is entirely within the power of the House, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, to take it into its own hands or to authorize the appointment of a select committee; but, under the rules of the House as they now stand, it is clearly referable to the elections committee.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in reply to what has been said I simply desire to suggest that there is a way in which a man can become a citizen of the United States. He can not become a citizen of the United States by being a candidate for office; he can not become a citizen of the United States by receiving more votes when he is a candidate for Congress than his opponent; he can not become a citizen of the United States by standing here in front of the Speaker's desk and taking the oath which ordinarily entitles a man to a seat in Congress, provided he is a citizen of the United States. None of these things makes a man a citizen, and unless he is a citizen he has no right to a seat here. The only question raised here is as to his citizenship, and that being the only question, it occurs to me that as a matter of fairness and as a matter of privilege, in which every man in this House has an interest, whether he sits on this side of the House or on the other side of the House, this matter ought to be investigated at once, not by a committee to be appointed at some time in the future, which will be burdened with other business when it is appointed, but by a committee which will have nothing else before it and which can investigate this one matter now and speedily. Therefore I think the resolution ought to pass without this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 169, noes 121.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 178, nays 94, answered "present" 2, not voting 113, as follows:

Resolves of the legislature of the State of Maine, requesting the repeal by Congress of section 20 of title 33 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, admitting certain lumber manufactured in New Brunswick into the ports of the United States free of duty.

Whereas for a period of more than seventy-five years, and for a period of forty years, by virtue of a special act of the Congress of the United States, lumber grown in the forests of Maine, to an amount exceeding one hundred millions per year, has been driven down the St. John River into the Province of New Brunswick, and after being manufactured has been admitted to the markets of the United States free of duty, to the great advantage of the inhabitants of New Brunswick, and with the effect of building up the city of St. John, New Brunswick, and the provincial cities and towns, at the expense of and to the detriment of the inhabitants of northern Maine, especially of those living in the St. John and Aroostook valleys; and whereas the inhabitants of New Brunswick, and especially those interested in the lumber business in said province and more especially those residing in the city of St. John, which city has been chiefly benefited and enriched as a result of said special act of Congress, have proven themselves utterly ungrateful and disposed to harass and annoy those who are engaged in the manufacture of lumber on the upper St. John in Maine, as shown by measures presented in the legislature of New Brunswick at the two last sessions, and further indicated by numerous newspaper articles published in the New Brunswick papers and by various other acts and circumstances: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the earnest wish of the legislature of Maine that the act of Congress hereinbefore referred to be repealed, and our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use all reasonable efforts to obtain a repeal of said law in the interests of and as a measure of justice to our own citizens engaged in the lumber business on the northern border and of all of the citizens of that region generally; and further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be requested to forward a copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A memorial to Congress praying for a grant of lands for a State park.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the governor and legislature of the State of Utah, respectfully represent that the land included in the Uintah Indian Reservation is about to be opened for settlement; that that part of said reservation which is included in the Strawberry Valley, and is hereinafter more particularly described, is of such an altitude that it is valueless for agricultural purposes; that it is admirably situated for a public park and reservoir purposes; that this State has passed an act creating a board to manage and control any lands acquired for a State park, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect, contingent upon the granting of this petition.

Wherefore your memorialists pray that that part of the Uintah Indian Reservation known as the Strawberry Valley and more particularly described as follows, to wit: Townships 2 and 3 south and ranges 10 and 11 west and fractional townships 4 south and ranges 10 and 11 west of the Uintah special meridian be granted to the State of Utah to be used perpetually as a State park, the National Government reserving the right to construct a reservoir or reservoirs with appropriate canals within the limits of the proposed grant, and your memorialists will ever pray.

Joint resolution petitioning Congress to approve of and support appropriation for the permanent improvement of the upper Mississippi River between St. Louis, Mo., and St. Paul, Minn., by maintaining a channel of 6 feet in depth at low water.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein): Whereas the permanent improvement of the upper Mississippi River between St. Louis, Mo., and St. Paul, Minn., by maintaining a channel of 6 feet in depth at low water will be in the interest of commerce and for the benefit of all people of the five States contiguous: Therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That we request the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Missouri to approve of and support the request and petition of the Upper Mississippi Improvement Association now pending before Congress for the improvement.

I, B. F. Russell, chief clerk of the house of representatives of the forty-third general assembly of Missouri, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy of this joint resolution, passed by the forty-third session of the general assembly of the State of Missouri.

Witness my hand as chief clerk this 18th day of March, A. D. 1905, at the city of Jefferson, county of Cole, and State of Missouri.

B. F. RUSSELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STONE presented a petition of the legislature of Missouri, praying that an appropriation be made to improve the Mississippi River at or near the foot of the Des Moines River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution.

Whereas the improvement of the Mississippi River is of great importance to the State of Missouri, as well as other States bordering on its shores, and our country at large; and

Whereas the making of a deep-water channel would materially improve the navigation of such river; and

Whereas at various points along said river there are places where it is necessary to make such deep channels, or build canals in order to carry on navigation at certain times of the year and certain stages of the water in order to successfully pass the rapids in said river at certain points within the territory of Missouri, Illinois, and Iowa; and

Whereas there is at this time great need of the betterment of the navigation of Des Moines Rapids, which are in the Mississippi River from Keokuk, Iowa, and Hamilton, Ill., north to Fort Madison, Iowa; and

Whereas there is now pending before Congress a bill in relation to the erection of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the foot of the said Des Moines Rapids, and the building of a proper lock to facilitate the navigation of said river under the supervision and direction of the United States Government, which measure is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for examination and discussion; and

Whereas the accomplishment of a deep-water channel at such point would materially aid in the navigation of said river and thereby benefit all the citizens of this country, and especially the citizens of the States bordering thereon: Therefore, in view of the general utility and great importance of such measure to Missouri, as well as our country at large, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the general assembly of Missouri (the senate concurring therein), That we approve of all measures to promote the improvement of the Mississippi River and the navigation of the same, and to that end commend to the favorable consideration of Congress the measure under consideration and now before its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Missouri Senators and Representatives in Congress.

I, B. F. Russell, chief clerk of the house of representatives of the forty-third general assembly of Missouri, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy of this joint resolution, passed by the forty-third session of the general assembly of the State of Missouri.

Witness my hand as chief clerk this 18th day of March, A. D. 1905, at the city of Jefferson, county of Cole, and State of Missouri.

B. F. RUSSELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STONE presented a petition of the legislature of Missouri, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Missouri River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint and concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein): Whereas the people of the State of Missouri are particularly interested in the improvements of the Missouri River, which flows across the State from its western to its eastern border, through a country remarkable for its fertility and commercial development, in order that it may be made a highway of commerce and that disastrous floods from the rise of said river damaging to the agricultural and commercial interests of the State, may be prevented; and in view of the fact that with reasonable and just appropriations for the improvement of the Missouri River, as a highway of commerce, cheap transportation would be afforded to the people who live in the territory tributary thereto, and railroad rates would thereby be reduced, or advance therein prevented; and in view of the fact that the failure to improve the Missouri River has caused the same to be subject to overflow, to the great damage of the cities and farming territory along its banks; and

Whereas the truth of all the facts herein asserted is generally conceded, yet the policy of the National Congress in the past has resulted in discrimination against the interests of the people of the Missouri Valley and in neglect of any improvements of this river, while lavish expenditures have been made upon creeks and small streams in other parts of the country, a result largely due to the fact that no Representative from any of the States on the Missouri River has been appointed a member of the Committee of the National House of Representatives on Rivers and Harbors: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Missouri (the senate thereof concurring herein), as follows: That the Representatives in Congress and the Senate or Senators from the State of Missouri be, and they are hereby, urged and requested to make every possible effort to secure from the National Congress appropriations for the improvement of the Missouri River for the accomplishment of the purpose as herein set forth.

Second. That the Speaker of the next House of Representatives and the minority leader of said House be, and they are hereby, urged and requested to place upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives Representatives from those States bordering on the Missouri River.

I, B. F. Russell, chief clerk of the house of representatives of the forty-third general assembly of Missouri, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true copy of joint and concurrent resolution passed by the forty-third session of the general assembly of the State of Missouri.

Witness my hand as chief clerk this 18th day of March, A. D. 1905, at the city of Jefferson, county of Cole, and State of Missouri.

B. F. RUSSELL,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STONE presented a petition of the legislature of Missouri, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint and concurrent resolution No. 5.

Whereas a large number of State legislatures have, at various times, adopted memorials and resolutions in favor of the election of United States Senators by popular vote; and

Whereas the National House of Representatives has, on four separate occasions within recent years, adopted resolutions in favor of this proposed change in the method of electing United States Senators, which were not adopted by the Senate; and

Whereas Article V of the Constitution of the United States provides that Congress, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the Several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, and believing there is a general desire upon the part of the citizens of the State of Missouri that the United States Senators should be elected by a direct vote of the people: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That the legislature of the State of Missouri favors the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution which shall provide for the election of United States Senators by popular vote, and joins with other States of the Union in respectfully requesting that a convention be called for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as provided for in Article V of the said Constitution, which amendment shall provide for a change in the present method of electing United States Senators, so that they can and shall be chosen in each State by a direct vote of the people.

Resolved, That a copy of this joint and concurrent resolution and application to Congress for the calling of said convention be sent to the secretary of state of each State of the United States, and that a similar copy be sent to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

Introduced by Mr. Dorris, of Oregon County.

INTERSTATE RAILROAD INCORPORATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it may lie upon the table. I give notice that I shall hereafter call it up in order that I may submit some remarks upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission frame and report to the Congress of the United States, within twenty days after the passage of this resolution, a national incorporation act for railroads engaged in interstate commerce, providing, among other things, as follows:

First. For the construction of interstate railroads throughout the United States, the amount of bonds and stock to be issued by such national corporations to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and not to exceed in any event the actual cost of such railroads.

Second. For the consolidation of railroads now engaged in interstate commerce, the amount of stock and bonds issued for such consolidation to be approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and not to exceed in any event the actual value of the railroads consolidated, such value to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Third. For the increase of the issues of bonds or stock by such corporations for the purchase of connecting or intersecting lines, for new construction, or for betterment of the roads, the amount of such issue of stock and bonds to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and not to exceed in any event the cost of such new construction, the betterments, or the value of the intersecting or connecting lines acquired.

Fourth. For the imposition of a percentage tax upon the gross receipts of all such corporations in lieu of all taxes upon the property of such railroad corporations and their bonds and capital stock, and in lieu of all taxes upon the bonds and shares of stock of such railroad companies in the hands of bondholders or stockholders, the property of such railroads and their bonds and stocks to be entirely exempt from State, county, or municipal taxation, save as permitted by such incorporation act, and for a just plan of distributing such taxes among the States in which such railroads operate upon some equitable basis, such percentage to be so adjusted, if practicable, as to yield in the aggregate an amount equal to the taxes now paid by such railroads, and to be increased gradually through a period of ten years, until it reaches an aggregate of 5 per cent upon the gross receipts of such corporations.

Fifth. For a limitation of the dividends of such corporations to 4 per cent on the capital stock, three-fourths of all surplus earnings over 4 per cent per annum to be applied, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to betterments, increase of wages, or reduction in rates, and one-fourth thereof to be applied from time to time, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to extra dividends, no reduction of rates to be made by the Interstate Commerce Commission which will imperil such dividends of 4 per cent.

Sixth. For the creation of a pension fund for railroad employees disqualified either by injury or by age for active service, by setting aside a percentage of the gross receipts of the railroads in a fund in the Treasury, to be invested according to rules and regulations made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, such pension system to be devised, changed, and modified from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Seventh. For the exercise by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the powers of a board of conciliation in all disputes between such railroad corporations and their employees as to compensation, hours of labor, and protection of life and limb.

Eighth. For the deposit in the United States Treasury by such railroad companies of all sums collected in excess of the rates fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission pending the determination of suits arising from rate reduction, such deposit to remain in the Treasury until the final determination of the suit, and to be returned to the railroad if such determination is in its favor, but if the decision is against the railroad such deposit to be turned over to the pension fund for railroad employees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Nevada, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution lie upon the table, and I give notice that I will ask leave to address the Senate on the resolutions on Monday next.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask the Senator if that is really a serious proposition?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Entirely so.

Mr. SPOONER. It would be hard to believe, but for the Senator's statement. I think he has large views upon this subject and plan, and he evidently knows very precisely what he wants in a bill. I should much dislike, Mr. President, to vote for a resolution instructing or requesting—it ought to be requesting and not instructing, because we have no right to instruct the Interstate Commerce Commission—requesting the Commission to draw for the Senate a bill which the Senator's resolution indicates he himself could draw with perfect accuracy. I think there has never been, certainly there never has been since I have been a member of the Senate, any precedent for such a proposition—I am not talking about the merits of the Senator's proposed bill—but I certainly have no knowledge of any previous proposition in which the Senate has requested some outside body—a commission or anybody else outside of the Senate—to draw for it a bill. That is why I asked the Senator if he really meant seriously to have this resolution passed requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to draw such a bill as he has indicated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say in answer to the Senator that it is immaterial to me whether the Interstate Commerce Commission frames the bill or whether the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate frames the bill, or whether an individual member of this body frames the bill. In any event it will be considered by the proper committee and in the Senate, and can then be rejected or amended or modified.

I have given serious consideration to the question of framing a national incorporation act, but I feared that if I attempted to present such a bill to this body its attention might be directed to the details of the bill rather than to the essential principles, and that the latter might be lost sight of in the confusion of debate. Hence I concluded to present the essential principles, of a national incorporation act to the Senate in some form without all the details that are involved in a long incorporation act. Senators are aware how long these acts are and how many details they cover, and as I wished to address myself simply to the essential principles, I thought this would be the simplest form.

I might have suggested that a joint commission frame and report such a bill—a commission composed of Senators and Representatives—and to such a commission possibly might have been added experts in railroad management; but my observation of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the hearings we have had before the Interstate Commerce Committee is that there is no body anywhere in this country better qualified to frame an incorporation act than that Commission, which certainly has had more experience with railroads than any other body in the service of the United States. I do not see why we should hesitate to avail ourselves of their knowledge and experience in the mere framing of a bill. I do not see how it detracts at all from the dignity of the Senate to call upon an executive body to give the Senate the benefit of their knowledge and of their experience in a matter of this kind. But that, of course, is to be left to the Senate. If they should approve of the principles involved in this resolution, and if some Senator can suggest some other method of framing a bill, or some other body by which it shall be framed, of course it makes no difference to me. My only concern is that we should enter upon legislation involving the essential principles to which I have called attention in the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator what power the Senate has to direct the Interstate Commerce Commission to draft bills for the Senate? Of course the Senate might request it, being in need, probably, as the Senator thinks, of outside assistance in regard to drafting such legislation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So far as I am concerned, I will say that I am very glad to have any competent man aid me in drawing a bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course the Senator has a right to ask such assistance in drafting a bill, but this is a resolution of the Senate directing the Commission—"requesting" would be just the same, only a little worse, from my standpoint—to draw such a bill for the use of this body.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. I want to know what our condition would be if the Interstate Commerce Commission should decline to draw the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will consider that question when the contingency arises. I am sure it is the commonest thing in legislation, both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, to consider bills that have been presented by the Executive Departments of the Government. Such bills go to the proper committees and receive consideration. It would be entirely within the province of this Commission, which is charged by law with the duty of making recommendations to Congress regarding such matters, to frame a bill and to send it to the Congress of the United States urging its passage. It can do that, and it seems to me it would be entirely proper for us to ask them to frame such a bill; but that is a matter of detail to which I attach no importance. The resolution is here and can be amended in any form so as to secure the framing of such a bill by a committee if the Senate so desires.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere, but I merely wish to say that I shall offer an amendment to that resolution when I have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suppose the resolution has gone over under the rule?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

RULES FOR PRESENTATION OF ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that, in accordance with the provision of Rule XL, I propose to move an amendment to the rules, which will modify Rule VII. For that purpose I submit a resolution and ask that it be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

Senators having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their name and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions, memorials, and bills of a private nature shall, with the approval of the presiding officer, be entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators presenting them, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of Debates for publication in the RECORD. Reports of private pension bills from the Committee on Pensions may be delivered to the Secretary of the Senate, and by him, with the approval of the presiding officer of the Senate, be placed upon the Calendar and entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators reporting them, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of Debates for publication in the RECORD.

REGULATION OF INSURANCE.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I present a resolution with respect to the insurance question, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not know the nature of the resolution, but I merely want to state to the Senator that it is very important we should have a short executive session in order to refer a great body of nominations.

Mr. CULBERSON. The resolution is very short, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it might be a resolution of adjournment.

Mr. CULBERSON. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be, and is hereby, directed to consider and report to the Senate as soon as may be practicable whether the Congress has authority under the Constitution to supervise and regulate the business of marine, fire, or life insurance.

EXAMINATIONS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I offer a resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be directed to inform the Senate (1) whether all the reports of the examinations of the national banks made by the bank examiners since March 4, 1893, have been preserved in his office; (2) how often the regular examinations have been made; (3) whether it is the duty of every bank examiner to examine the records and vouchers showing the expenditures for all purposes of each bank visited by him; (4) whether it is his duty, if he finds that moneys have been illegally or wastefully expended by the bank, to state the facts in his report; (5) whether the reports now on file made since said date show any payments by any bank to any political committee or to any chairman, treasurer, or other officer of a political committee; and (6) whether such reports show any payments of the moneys of a bank to any person upon any voucher, or without any voucher, where the circumstances of the payments suggest that the money paid was to be used to carry on a political campaign or for any political purpose; and if any reports now on file show any such payments to any political committee, or to a chairman, treasurer, or other officer of a political committee, or any payments suggesting a use of money for a political campaign or any political purpose, said Comptroller of the Currency is directed to report all the facts in all such cases to the Senate, and to inform the Senate what action, if any, has been taken as the result of the discovery of any such payments as aforesaid.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the resolution go over under the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest that the resolution should be directed not to the Comptroller of the Currency, but to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am indifferent as to that, so that I get the information I am after.

Mr. TELLER. The Comptroller of the Currency has no right, unless directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to make a report of that character.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to change the resolution and direct it to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that he modify his resolution to-morrow in the way I have indicated.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will do that. I am indifferent as to the form of the resolution; it is the matter I am after.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over and be printed.

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and is hereby, directed to make inquiry and report to the Senate whether since March 4, 1893, any payments have been made by any national bank or banks to any political committee, or to the chairman, treasurer, or other officer of a political committee, or to carry on any political campaign, or for any political purpose; and said committee, if such payments have been made, is directed to report all the facts in detail to the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 6, 1905.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. Robertson and Mr. Ransdell, Representatives from the State of Louisiana, appeared before the bar and took the oath of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Third Report of the United States Board on Geographic Names, constituted by Executive order of September 4, 1890.

The attention of the Congress is invited to the recommendations of the Board that, in addition to the number of copies of the report printed for the use of the Congress, 2,500 copies be printed for the use of the Board, and that an annual appropriation of $2,500 be asked to enable the Board to conduct the necessary correspondence, make investigations of questions submitted, and prepare, print, and promptly distribute the decisions made by the Board.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1905.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I arise to propose a correction of the Journal of the House. I find on page 59 of the RECORD that two bills were introduced giving American registry to two steamers, one called the Success and the other the Marie, and it appears that they were sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask to correct the Journal so as to have it appear that the bills were sent to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be so corrected. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 480) supplemental to an act to provide for the construction of a canal, etc., be now laid before the House for immediate consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that it may remain the special order until concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union under the rules of the House, and that its consideration be a continuing order until completed. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, pending the request——

The SPEAKER. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa desires also to limit debate?

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. I mean to limit debate upon this subject—that is, debate upon this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Upon the bill, yes, sir; not general debate in the ordinary sense of that term.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, pending the consideration of the request, will the gentleman grant me a few minutes—three or five minutes—in which to make a statement?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unusual request, but it is also a rather unusual condition with which we are faced. Nobody upon this side of the House has any desire to delay or to obstruct the speedy construction of a transisthmian canal. We are very anxious not only to avoid an actuality of that sort, but any appearance of that sort. The request is somewhat unusual in this, that ten million dollars—a rather large amount from my section of the country at any rate, and not a contemptible one for any part of the world—has been spent within a short time. We have no detailed account of how it has been expended. I myself do not doubt it has been honestly expended. I might perhaps criticise the wisdom of the expenditure in some respects. The detailed statement in the RECORD this morning is not a detailed statement, but a summary of summaries; that is to say, the amount expended for sanitation is stated in one column and the amount expended for supplies in another, and the amount spent for another object in another, etc., and these were added up, giving the sum total in the RECORD. Now, Mr. Speaker, the sole difference between the request and the ordinary operation of the House is that the matter has not been considered by one of the standing committees. The matter, when it comes before the House, if the unanimous consent is granted, will come before it for its consideration with the usual right of amendment, with the usual right of debate in the Committee of the Whole and in the House, the only restriction upon that being that the general debate shall be confined to the subject-matter under consideration, namely, the bill itself. Under all the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] and I, acting for the minority upon the Committee on Rules, have concluded that we ought to give unanimous consent to the request, and we shall make no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTAUER. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] yield me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is stated in its title to be—

A bill supplemental to an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, and making appropriations for isthmian canal construction, and for other purposes.

As a supplemental bill it was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The first section of the bill is supplemental to the Panama Canal act, but the second section of the bill, the one which appeals to me to be the more important, and surely the one which justifies immediate consideration of the bill, carries an appropriation of $16,500,000 and is clearly a deficiency item. It is referred to by the President in his message as "an emergency appropriation." It comes under the head of a deficiency appropriation, and consequently under the rule is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. I surely do not want to interpose any delay in the consideration of this act, as I approve its object thoroughly. Moreover, the estimate for the appropriation came to the House in the regular form of an item of deficiency, and which has been properly referred to the Committee on Appropriations. My only object is that, as an old member of the Committee on Appropriations, I desired to call the attention of the House to this matter, in order that this section may not at any future date be referred to as a precedent for the reference of Panama Canal appropriations to any other committee than the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the House and to my colleague [Mr. LITTAUER] that the second section of the bill—I believe it is the second section—refers to the taxation of the United States bonds. Of course, that subject is a subject that is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means, but I have not raised any objection, and should not have said a word about it in the House, because the bill comes before the House as a bill without reference to its having been referred to any committee. If the request was to take the bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I should still be in favor of it, because I do not believe that either of these sections of the bill belong to that committee, or that they have jurisdiction over them. But this is an easy method of getting at the bill for action, and I think that the House ought to act upon it as speedily as possible. Therefore, I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] includes in his request for unanimous consent, if the Chair understands it, the proposition to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I did not make that motion, Mr. Speaker, for the reason that there is no Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and I would have no authority to make that request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would not the proper request be to vacate the reference?

The SPEAKER. Probably that would be the better request, namely, to vacate the reference. The suggestion of the Chair is that there is no question about the bill being before the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will put that in my request, namely, that the reference to the committee be vacated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the bill, I believe, has already been read?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I will attempt to discuss briefly——

The SPEAKER. The bill is upon the Union Calendar.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 480.

The motion of Mr. HEPBURN was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (with Mr. VREELAND in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 480) supplemental to an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, and making appropriation for Isthmian Canal construction, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, shall be subject to the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, the same as though said bonds were issued under the provisions of said act of March 14, 1900.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,500,000 to continue the construction of the Isthmian Canal, to be expended under the direction of the President in accordance with the said act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, approved June 28, 1902, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, the said sum to continue available until expended: Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902.

SEC. 3. That a detailed statement of the expenditures from this and subsequent appropriations for the construction of the Isthmian Canal shall be made annually to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding briefly to a discussion of this bill I want to say a word or two in order that the gentleman from New York in my front [Mr. LITTAUER] and the gentleman from New York on my left [Mr. PAYNE] may be able to possess their souls in patience. There is no subtle attempt upon the part of gentlemen who have heretofore been connected with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to interfere with the jurisdiction of the respective committees that they so long have ornamented. We do not want to assume any of their functions. There is no purpose upon the part of the membership of that committee as it may be constituted to commit any act of violence upon their jurisdiction. We recognize the fact that these matters are disposed of by rules rather than by the preferences of gentlemen, and we find that the rule provides that all of those matters relating to commerce shall be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; and it is because this great subject of the canal has relation to commerce that Congress thought it had the power under the Constitution to authorize its construction. It is part of the commerce of the country. It relates to that; and as this measure relates to that great enterprise, it has been thought probably just by the Speaker that in this particular case at least that committee should have jurisdiction. There is no usurpation upon their part, nor desire to usurp anything——

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HEPBURN. And I hope gentlemen will be quiet and be able to sleep peaceably in their beds without being disturbed by fears that their prerogatives, just and proper, are in any way to be abridged.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, no one has charged that there was any subtle or surreptitious or felonious intent to get away with the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. No one has ever supposed up to five minutes ago that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] would claim for a moment that there was a word or line in this bill which indicated that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had any jurisdiction whatever of the subject-matter. One section relates to appropriation, the other to taxation. Why, the gentleman may just as well claim that any bill relating to revenue, which raised the tariff or imposed a tax, was under the jurisdiction of that committee, the chairmanship of which he has so signally ornamented for the past few years in connection with this canal project. He might just as well claim that every such bill was subject to the jurisdiction of that committee, because a customs duty is supposed to bear some relation to the commerce—to the foreign commerce—of the United States.

I do not think the gentleman will try to maintain any such position as that when he reflects upon the matter. I was not even disposed to raise the question or suggest it until it was suggested by my friend formerly upon the Committee on Appropriations, because the request of the gentleman from Iowa was to oust his committee of the jurisdiction of this bill, to which they were not entitled, and bring it before the House, so that we might have speedy consideration and speedy action upon this question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has shown in this last remark of his that he perhaps does not understand this subject. [Laughter.] "The gentleman from Iowa" did not attempt to oust his committee or the Committee on Appropriations from jurisdiction of this matter. It was shown a moment ago, when he was addressed by the Speaker of the House; he recognized the fact that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did not have an existence now—has not been appointed. I think the gentleman knew that. The gentleman is perhaps unhappy in the broad statement that he makes—"that up to five minutes ago no one supposed that a contention of this kind would be made." He ought to have changed that language, and said that those who were unfamiliar with the rules of the House might have had such a notion. [Laughter.] I get my idea from a reading of the rule, which says that all subjects relating to commerce shall be referred to that committee; and if this matter relates to commerce, then I submit that it has jurisdiction, notwithstanding the argument of my friend. I would not assume to attempt to discharge any of the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means. Oh, no! Those belong to the white-buttoned mandarins of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not like to be personal, but the gentleman does not think he is out of place, then, to be at the head of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee instead of on the Ways and Means Committee, if the white-button mandarins of the House are the people who are to be on the Committee on Ways and Means. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the Chair if that is an occult and hidden compliment to me? [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the committee will remember that the bill to which this is supplemental provided for the issuance of $135,000,000 of bonds, the proceeds of the sale of which was to meet the expenditures authorized in the construction of this canal. Those bonds at 2 per cent were not placed upon the same footing as other 2 per cent bonds, in this, that if used as a basis for circulation, the tax on that circulation would be 1 per cent a year, whereas under the other issues that tax would be but one-half of 1 per cent a year. The first section of the bill is to rectify that error and to place the bonds that may be issued under the act of June 28, 1902, upon the same footing as other 2 per cent bonds.

This bill makes an appropriation for $16,500,000, estimated to be necessary to meet the expenditures between this date and the 30th of June next. Ten million dollars have already been expended by the Commission, but a large portion of that was not expended by those gentlemen who are now charged with responsibility for the management of canal affairs. A detailed statement of those expenditures was printed in the RECORD of this morning, and a statement of the estimates necessary for the next seven months is also printed in the RECORD.

This aggregate sum seems to be a large one, but gentlemen must remember that this work is now being inaugurated, and extraordinary expenditures are necessary in the way of providing quarters for the vast army of men who must be employed, in providing proper machinery, and gathering together the laborers who are to conduct the work. It seems to be a large sum, and yet it is a necessary one. I want to remind the committee that they must not fall into the error of supposing that the machinery, the housing, and other items of expenditure of that kind were all covered and paid for in the $40,000,000 paid to the French company. The work done, the buildings erected, and the materials assembled were supposed to be, in the aggregate, in the neighborhood of $40,000,000 in value; but, as a matter of fact, when we came to take possession of those houses—three or four thousand of them in number—it was found that they were practically worthless. They were wooden houses; they had been unusued for ten or twelve years. Buildings decay rapidly in that climate and under that intense rainfall of one hundred and thirty-odd inches a year. Many of them were abandoned as worthless, and all of the remainder had to undergo extensive and expensive repairs.

The machinery that was purchased turned out to be almost absolutely worthless. There were old-fashioned, obsolete dredges and digging machines, railroad locomotives of a pattern undesirable for use, and many of them having been exposed to the weather without any care or protection for a dozen years. When we attempted to use them they were found to be practically worthless.

The same might be said of the cars that were there in such great numbers—thousands of them, perhaps, but small, inefficient, and weather-worn to the extent of uselessness.

Our Commission has been compelled to replace these obsolete and worthless machines, to renew the buildings, and to provide generally the material that must be used in the construction from the stores of to day.

There is a pay roll containing the names of over 13,000 people. The payments are monthly and twice a month. The laborers are paid in the middle and at the end of each month. There is no sufficient fund for the payment that becomes due on the 15th of this month. If that payment is not made these laborers, being largely strangers to our people and our nation and our customs, will be fearful; the labor will be disturbed, and harm will be the result. Therefore we have asked that this emergency bill be passed.

I believe I have nothing more that I desire to say, unless some gentlemen have questions that I may be able to answer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa what relation the item of $1,080,000 found on page 40 for salaries and wages has to the item of the Isthmian Canal Commission, $185,256.98, general expenses?

Mr. HEPBURN. Where is that item?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman will find it on the right-hand side of the page. It says, "For salaries and wages, $1,080,000." I would like to know what relation that item has to the item of $185,256.98, being the first item in the schedule, "Isthmian Canal Commission, general expenses." I want to know what relation that item has to canal construction.

Mr. HEPBURN. I find the first item the gentleman alludes to, "General expenses, Isthmian Canal Commission, $185,256.98." I suppose that that is the cost to the Government of the Commission prior to June 30, 1905, and for the three months following. But the first items in the left-hand column are the expenditures of the $10,000,000 up to that date, from the very earliest, commencing, perhaps, as early as July, 1902.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is when we took charge of the enterprise.

Mr. HEPBURN. Immediately after the passage of the authorizing act. Now, the other item——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The first item I called the gentleman's attention to is on the top of the page, on the right-hand column—$1,080,000 for salaries and wages.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is the estimate of the expenditures for October and November, 1905, $1,080,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then that simply includes salaries and wages only for those two months?

Mr. HEPBURN. The first seven or eight lines of the second column on page 40 are estimates for October and November, and the others are expenditures that are in the first column.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I see. One is the actual expenditures and the other are the estimates only.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; they have not got the report here yet.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, has the gentleman from Iowa information so that he can give anything like the details for salaries from the beginning until now?

Mr. HEPBURN. I am not sure that I can give a detailed statement of the salaries, but I can give this general statement, that of the salaries over $5,000 there are 26, possibly 28. Salaries of $5,000, 6; of $4,000 and under $5,000, 6; of $3,000 and under $4,000, 55; $2,000 to $3,000, 126. That includes engineers——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. All the personnel.

Mr. HEPBURN. And the higher skilled men. Salaries, you will remember, must necessarily be much higher there than here.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman explain what is the total amount of expenditures, approximately, thus far made toward the construction of this canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. The total known expenditures are $8,095,092.15. The estimates for October and November that are now known, the expenditures being there and the office here, are $1,892,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman pretend to say that only $9,000,000 has been expended in all matters relating to the construction of this canal?

Mr. HEPBURN. Nearly $10,000,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What is the total amount of bonds that has been authorized to issue?

Mr. HEPBURN. Authorized? No bonds have been issued.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am speaking of the authority to issue bonds.

Mr. HEPBURN. One hundred and thirty-five million dollars.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will.

Mr. ALEXANDER. On page 40, at the top of the second column, it says, "Unpaid audited accounts." What Department has the auditing of these accounts?

Mr. HEPBURN. The Commission has an auditor here in the city of Washington and one on the Isthmus.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And distinct from any Department?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is my understanding. These expenditures are not made through a Department, excepting as the President makes them. The authority for the construction of this work is given to him, and the responsibility imposed upon him.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Then these accounts do not go regularly to any Department, but go to a board that has been or is yet to be created to be audited?

Mr. HEPBURN. It goes to an auditor already appointed and already performing that duty, as I understand. The gentleman will find that his name is signed here—E. S. Benson, general auditor.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what valuation was originally placed upon the machinery and equipment of the railroad when this bargain was made with the French Government, if he can tell us?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it is a long time since I was familiar with those estimates. I think the estimated value of the stock of the railway was something in excess of $7,000,000.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I am speaking of the equipment.

Mr. HEPBURN. The other material I can not now from memory state.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As a matter of fact, was it not represented that this machinery was valuable?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. And that the equipment was of such a character as would enable us to utilize it in the construction of this work?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, utilize it to a considerable extent; yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But it now turns out to be practically all valueless?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think that is the conclusion that most people have arrived at.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides that detailed statements of the expenditures hereafter made shall be submitted to Congress. Is it the intention that the statements submitted shall be in the same form as the statement which appears in to-day's RECORD as to those already made?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no knowledge that I can impart to the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman for this reason: It is impossible to tell for what purpose any amount stated here has been expended, except as stated under a general head. It is reported quite commonly, I understand, that this Commission to-day is employing a so-called "press agent," located in this city, at a salary of $10,000 a year. It may be a very necessary position, but how could Congress ascertain if a thing like that was so; and if it be a fact and it was deemed improper, how could Congress prevent it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, this statement to which the gentleman refers as being in the RECORD does not assume to be a detailed statement. That is a mere summary. I suppose that a detailed statement would be a very different matter, and if I were called upon to perform that duty and had to define that word I would think that a very much fuller statement than the one that we have before us would be required by the language of the third section of this act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I had hoped that the gentleman himself would have insisted upon some such detailed statement for the information of this House before he asked for this appropriation of $16,000,000, so that the House could be informed of the particular items which make up the summary; and I now ask the gentleman if he knows whether it is a fact that this Commission has employed in this city a so-called "press agent" at a salary of $10,000 a year?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Could the gentleman think that that was a necessary and proper expenditure by this Commission?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I would not think that a personage of that kind would equal in usefulness an Irishman who could well wield a shovel. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be quite interesting to the House, but it is hardly a good defense of an appropriation of $10,000 for such a purpose in any department of this Government. Everybody desires that this canal be built properly, and I am convinced the gentleman from Iowa wishes the money properly expended, and I believe that with his power of acquiring information it seems strange that this slight detail should escape his keen observation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why, Mr. Chairman, the duty of the gentleman from Iowa to obtain information upon the very interesting subject that the gentleman from New York has referred to is no greater than the obligation to secure that information which rests upon the gentleman from New York; and as long as he has started in that direction, as long as he has given ear to rumor of that kind and knows where probably to put his finger upon those who know, why did the gentleman not pursue it? Why does he come here and attempt to encumber this debate and give a partisan aspect——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. To this debate by a query of that kind? The gentleman knows who to ask; he knows he has authority here as a Member of this House to bring a response to a question of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEPBURN. There is something in the nature of a charge of misappropriation of funds——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. Toward some one responsible for the distribution of those funds in the query that the gentleman has made. Why did not you, sir, exercise your right and learn the facts and bring home the charge to the man who misappropriated the funds of this nation if this is a misappropriation? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield; yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think that perhaps my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was correct in suggesting that some other committee than the gentleman's should have taken jurisdiction of this matter. Whom else would I ask for information regarding the items making up these summaries of expenditures when an appropriation of $16,000,000 is asked of this House other than the gentleman who comes here and submits the statement printed in the RECORD in order to obtain from this House the appropriation? I am reliably informed, not alone taking my information from the newspapers of the cities, but from other reliable sources [laughter on the Republican side], that there is a gentleman sitting in an office in this city, a gentleman appointed by this Commission, whose title, so far as can be ascertained, is that of "press agent"——

Mr. HEPBURN. Who is he; what is his name?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know his name.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yet you are "reliably informed."

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I did I would not have asked the gentleman. But I understand that this gentleman's sole business is to distribute information——

Mr. HEPBURN. I never heard of it before; that is the difference between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If it be true that this Commission is paying $10,000 a year to a gentleman for such services, it does not seem to me to be a proper use of this money. I am not seeking this information for a partisan purpose; I am asking the gentleman to act with me to have this money properly expended.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I will go just as far as the gentleman in reprobation if such a condition exists. I do not believe that is a proper appropriation of this money if it has been made. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not a friend of that kind of expenditure, but I know nothing of it, as I told the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman abused me because I tried to find out if he knew it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Abused you? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, or attempted to; and the gentleman attempted to put me in the position of making political capital out of this matter.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, I did not try anything of that kind. I thought the gentleman probably had placed himself in that position.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The gentleman from New York will not be misunderstood when he tries to make political capital out of anything; he will be able to make his position very plain. There is an item here to which I desired to call the attention of the gentleman, namely, estimated expenditures for October and November, 1905, at Washington, salaries and wages, $30,000 for each month. It was to ascertain whether those items included provision for such an officer as I have mentioned that I started to interrogate the gentleman. I will ask the Commission within a day or two myself and see if they know more about it than the gentleman who asks for the appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. They certainly know more about it. Of course they know more about it; and I am only surprised that the gentleman from New York should have waited to be instructed by me in this manner with regard to who would know most about this business, the men who attend to it or the men who only occasionally have their attention called to it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] yield to me for an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to ask, Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce can tell us as to the item entitled "Estimated expenditures for October and November, 1905," at Washington, "Material and supplies, $559,000?"

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose that those are purchases that are made by the purchasing agent located at Washington.

Mr. OLMSTED. Not for use at Washington?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no, sir.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask one or two further questions, with the gentleman's permission.

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I notice the item "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in the United States" down at the right-hand column on page 40 of the RECORD, $2,300,000. And then above that the first item is $4,000,000. Are we to infer from the fact that one item is to be expended in the United States that the $4,000,000 item is to be expended elsewhere?

Mr. HEPBURN. The first item, if the gentleman will notice, is "Estimated liabilities to December 1, 1905, covering material ordered and in transit." The other item is "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in the United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906." That is property, as I understand it, not yet delivered, but to be delivered and paid for in the interim between December 1 and June 30.

Mr. OLMSTED. My inquiry was directed more particularly—it may not be within the information of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—as to whether the $4,000,000 item was for material purchases in the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. I presume so; yes, sir. I think that is true.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask one or two further questions. Can the chairman state what proportion of the capital stock of the Panama Railway Company is now owned by the United States?

Mr. HEPBURN. It is all owned by the United States.

Mr. OLMSTED. And then the items numbered 4, 5, and 6, aggregating $1,800,000, we are really paying to ourselves?

Mr. HEPBURN. Items 5 and 6. They are for improvements to our own property. That road was found to be in quite a dilapidated condition. The rails were light and had been in use for a long time. The locomotives and cars were old and insufficient in number. The track is being relaid, and a large amount of the necessary equipment is being procured.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to make a further inquiry, without any reflection upon the chairman or his committee, or upon anybody else, and that is whether in these days when we are insisting upon greater publicity in the affairs of corporations—and recent events have shown its importance—whether he thinks that in a matter involving so large an expediture of money as we are now called upon to make we are not entitled to a fuller detailed statement of the expenditures already made than is herein contained?

I might take up time by calling attention to numerous items, but I will simply refer to the one on the bottom of the left-hand column of page 40 of the RECORD, which is merely illustrative of the lumping together of a good many items in other particulars, which is this: "Freight, advertising, etc., $144,085.23." Now, that seems to me to be a very incongruous grouping of items. How much of it was for freight, and how much of it was for advertising? It gives ground for such suggestions as have been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that there might be something covered up here that ought not to be covered. I do not charge that there is, I do not suppose that there is, but I think we ought to have from the proper department a detailed statement of these expenditures, so that we may know more fully in what direction the money has been used.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no doubt at all that there is a complete statement in detail attached to the annual report the gentleman has in his mind. I am told that is the case.

Mr. OLMSTED. Ought not the House to have that information in passing upon this important matter?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is a question for the House to determine. This amount is due in a little while, and we do not want to make two bites of a cherry.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am going to support your bill under all the circumstances of the case, but I am not at all satisfied with the manner in which previous expenditures are accounted for in the only statement thus far submitted to the House, and I am making these remarks in the hope that they may lead to a better accounting hereafter of the money we are now asked to appropriate in what appears to be a pressing emergency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, to lay the foundation for the question which I wish to ask, I will say that I understand that there is a very critical condition down on the Isthmus now. There is very little money left, and we will not be able to meet out of the appropriation their labor-roll obligations on the 15th day of December. We all want to give to the Canal Commission all that is necessary to continue the work without cessation. I know the character of colored labor, and I know that if some day, some Saturday evening, they do not receive pay—they are a suspicious lot of creatures and might come to the conclusion that the whole United States was bankrupt and a bad employer of labor, might move away. Now, the question I want to get at after laying this foundation is, Can the gentleman give the House some idea of the amount of money that will be absolutely necessary in order to carry on the work up to January 1 and meet the payments necessary to be met on the 1st day of January; because I propose to speak out perfectly frankly and say—and an explanation might help elucidate that question—that I propose later to offer an amendment reducing the amount which this bill carries to the amount absolutely necessary to carry on the work without stoppage or cessation beyond the 1st day of January, and thus let the balance of the money contemplated to be appropriated by this bill to come in its regular order under consideration and investigation by the committee, and, after scrutiny, a regular report by the committee to the House. So that I ask the gentleman to give me some idea, if he can, of the amount of money necessary to meet the urgent expenditures that must be met for labor and for machinery to be paid for, that are due now or will be on or before the 1st day of January.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no information that would allow me to state that. I will say this: I find that there is an estimate for October of $1,005,000; for November of $887,000. December, I understand, would be in excess of either of those months, for the reason that there is a constantly increasing number of employees, and that it would probably be something in excess of the estimate for October. Now, what there is carried for machinery furnished I am unable to say; but I understand that these sums amount to somewhere in excess of $2,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does not the estimate show——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Maine will permit me to conclude. I find here under the head of estimates and expenditures for October and November the sum of $1,892,000, and if there were added to that a proportionate amount for the month of December, which would carry the work up to and beyond the 1st of January, until the mid-January payments on the 15th, the pro rata share of December, $600,000, would run the total now required to $2,400,000. I have concluded that $2,500,000 would cover all the expenditures for October, November, and December.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is in error. If he will read a little further, the first item in the detailed statement composing the appropriation of $16,500,000, just below where his eye has rested, he will find this: "Estimated liabilities to December 1, 1905, covering material ordered and in transit, $4,000,000."

Mr. WILLIAMS. That, however, is an estimate.

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir; a liability to December 1, 1905.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Already incurred?

Mr. HEPBURN. A liability already incurred for property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the gentleman is of the opinion that $4,000,000 would cover that?

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I do not know that I am at all sure of that. That is an item that is due December 1.

Mr. TAWNEY. That does not include labor?

Mr. HEPBURN. No.

Mr. PAYNE. Look at No. 3.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then there is another item, the gentleman will notice, of $500,000. It is the fifth item in the estimate. Then there is another, the sixth item, amount due the Panama Railway Company December 1.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the gentleman, then, for my information and for the use of the House, to get the Canal Commission to give us an estimate of that sort, roughly, to come in to-day or to-morrow. I do not mean a detailed statement, but just the amount of money that they think will be necessary to run the work up to and including payments necessary to be made on January 1.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman can get that information just as readily as I can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman overestimates my weight with the Commission and underestimates his own. A request from the gentleman will be answered at once, and a request from me probably would not be.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I must say this, that I do not know anyone on that Commission, and I have never been in the rooms of the Commission since its reorganization.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I notice, on page 40, "purchase of steamers Havana and Mexico, $1,300,000." That is a rather large item. Will the chairman give us any information as to the need for the purchase of those steamers and the purposes for which they are used? I take it they are purchased for the transportation of freight. I wanted to find out whether it would not have been better to do that work by contract.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I do not know. This is the method that has been adopted by the Commission.

When the United States became the owner of the Panama Railway, they found that that corporation was engaged in the carrying of freight and passengers between New York and Colon. They were the owners of three steamers.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were a part of the Panama Railway Company's property.

Mr. HEPBURN. A part of the railroad. That business, as

I understand it, has been continued. In fact, it was the only regular means of communication between those two cities. There seems to be a public necessity for a continuance of it, and that there would have been a great derangement of large business interests in our coastwise trade if it had not been continued. When the new work began, and the assembling of new material, it was found that these three steamers were insufficient to carry on the business of the Government and this other service, so that in their judgment these two additional steamers were necessary and they were purchased, and are now engaged in that traffic at no expense, as I understand, to the United States, but with some profit to the United States and great convenience to the shipping public.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand that these steamers owned by the United States are now engaged in the carrying of freight and passengers for hire from Colon to New York.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is my understanding.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not know that before.

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. WANGER. As I remember the explanation of the purchase of the steamers Havana and Mexico, it was that the old steamers of the Panama Railway Steamship Company were not able to carry the larger machinery and supplies necessary on the Isthmus. These two steamers have very large hatchways and are in every respect the best adapted for shipping the necessary materials for the construction of the canal and reconstruction of the railway that the Commission could discover, and it was in order promptly to ship the materials which the Commission, and the railway company through the Commission, required that the two steamers were acquired.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are they being operated as part of the Canal Commission or part of the railroad corporation?

Mr. WANGER. The steamers are being run by the Panama Railway Steamship Company under an arrangement with the Commission. The Commission has purchased the steamers, as I understand it, and leased them to the steamship company.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do we own the transportation company also?

Mr. WANGER. We own the transportation company also.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then it is all the same thing?

Mr. WANGER. Largely a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There is the Panama Railway and then the Panama Transportation Company besides?

Mr. WANGER. The Panama Railway operates the steamship company.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then there is no independent company, but the whole thing is operated by the railway company?

Mr. WANGER. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And we own all the stock?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; we control the Panama Railway Company.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman know whether they are American or foreign bottoms?

Mr. WANGER. American bottoms, built in Cramp's shipyard.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the third section of the bill reads "Detailed statement of the expenditures from this and subsequent appropriations for the construction of the Isthmian Canal shall be made annually to Congress at the beginning of each regular session." On page 40, second column, there is printed what purports to be a detailed statement of the amount composing the appropriation of $16,500,000. It seems to me that that statement does not go into details as fully as the similar statement printed in the previous column. I submit that if that is the kind of detailed statement that is to be presented under this bill it would be exceedingly unsatisfactory to this House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would think so, too, and that is what the gentlemen preparing it think, for when they have given us a summary of the expenditures, they have given it to us in much greater detail than when they have given us a statement of the payments covered by the appropriations asked for. In that instance they simply state them generally, while in the other they go more into detail.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think it would improve that section if we were to insert after the word "detailed" the words "and classified," so that it would read "detailed and classified statement?" Then they would not include in that statement salaries, incidental expenses, and things of that kind, all running in under one item.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman means to segregate the classes.

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman wants it more complete, let it be itemized.

Mr. TAWNEY. That might be too cumbersome.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then let it be itemized for sums above a given amount.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think that if it was a detailed and classified statement it would be better.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Insert the word "itemized."

Mr. LITTAUER. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the words of the act are the same as the ordinary provisions of law covering the Department, and no doubt the expenditures will be detailed to us in a manner similar to other expenditures of the War Department. They are submitted to us with their regular annual estimates; they are both classified and detailed, and you can go into every little item if you so desire. They give a general table of classifications.

Mr. TAWNEY. Inasmuch as this is under no Department I do not think it would do any harm to put in the words "detailed and classified."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the first section of this bill is merely intended, as I understand it, to change the character of the bonds issued so that we may have a bond which will float at par owing to the diminished rate of taxation upon it. To that clause of the bill I have no objection. I want to give the House notice now of certain amendments which will be offered to the bill. I want them in the RECORD so that Members of the House may be studying them and may be able to pass upon them when we finally get to the stage of amendment, when the bill is read under the five-minute rule. This is a nonpartisan question. We are engaged in the construction of a great waterway connection between the two great oceans of the world. No part of the United States will be any more benefited by the completion of that work than that section in which I dwell. It has been a dream of southerners for years and years. No party can claim credit for first advocating a transisthmian canal. No individual can claim any preeminent credit for it. It has been pushed upon legislators because it was one of the foremost things in the minds and hearts of the people. In this great undertaking two things should be kept in mind as nearly as possible; first, a speedy construction of the work, and secondly, an honest expenditure of the money.

The strip which the United States owns down about the Isthmus of Panama has made itself celebrated for two apparently antagonistic characteristics—suddenness and gradualness. The suddenness with which it was acquired, the suddenness with which the money already appropriated has been expended, the gradualness with which the actual dirt is being actually moved. [Laughter.] The American people, above all things, should not be rendered dissatisfied and disgusted with that work. They wish to see it succeed. Our hearts are in it, and we wish to see it succeed; but we wish that all legislation should be of the right character.

Therefore it has seemed to me that to meet a peculiar condition of a critical character this rather unusual procedure ought to be taken by the American House of Representatives. It has not seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, that all of the provisions of this bill should be enacted into law. To some of those I propose now to call attention, and likewise to the amendments which will be offered at the proper time.

Section 2 reads as follows:

> That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,500,000 to continue the construction of the isthmian canal, to be expended under the direction of the President in accordance with the said act, etc.

Mr. Chairman, when the proper time comes I am going to offer an amendment to strike out the word "sixteen," in line 3, on page 2, and insert in lieu thereof whatever sum I ascertain to be sufficient to carry on the work beyond the payments to be made upon the 1st day of January, because after that—certainly before the payments to be made for mid-January or the payments to be made for the last of January—the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce will have been appointed and will have had ample opportunity to act. What sum I shall propose I do not myself now know. It seems to me from reading over this statement that the sum of $5,000,000 would cover all that would be necessary by that time, including the payments to be made on January 1, and would leave a margin of something over; but whatever the amount may be I shall move to insert that amount in lieu of the sixteen millions herein provided for.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the estimate which the gentleman wishes to make of the amount that may be needed at once under his proposition, does he expect to include the amounts for material and supplies purchased or simply the amount for salaries and labor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amount for salaries and labor and the amounts for materials and supplies already purchased which will fall due on January 1 or before that date—everything that is absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me a word, it is very difficult to tell exactly when a bill shall be paid. Most of the supplies are purchased in the United States. I only state this for the gentleman's benefit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, and they ought to be paid for in cash with a discount.

Mr. MANN. Most of the supplies, as I say, are purchased in the United States. They are not paid for until shipped to the Isthmus.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. And an acknowledgment made here when they arrive at the Isthmus. Of course it is desirable to pay them here as soon as the receipt is acknowledged in proper form.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that—as soon as the goods are delivered. Then that is a cash payment, and the purchaser is entitled under ordinary business methods to a discount from the bills.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me further, as to the sum estimated which is submitted, up to December 1, for materials and supplies purchased and in transit there are $4,000,000 of liabilities. Of course probably all of that should be paid by the 1st of January, because it will become due as soon as an acknowledgment is received here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have thought that, and for that reason included that amount.

Mr. MANN. Now, there will be probably several million dollars more on that basis.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There ought not to be after the Commission are informed by Congress of the fact that before any other appropriation is made, it must be considered by a committee. I presume that they have bought the bulk of their machinery now for future delivery. A great deal of it will be delivered by the 1st of December, and some of it by the 1st of January; but I presume that January would not carry over its proportionate share of that particular item.

Mr. MANN. Of course, they have purchased a very large amount of their machinery and implements, etc., and are urging speedy delivery. There is no question about their authority to make the purchase.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course not.

Mr. MANN. Of course, all they absolutely need, as far as that part of it is concerned, is enough to pay their salaries, their wages, and their bills as they become due.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all.

Mr. MANN. That, of course, we want to get at.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And in getting at that, I expect to find the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has a much better faculty of getting at financial details than I have—I am not much of a business man—of very material assistance, and I shall invite his cooperation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find in section 2, beginning on line 10, the following language:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902.

When we reach that in due course of legislation I shall move to strike out the proviso, and for this reason: There are now lying in the national banks of the United States on deposit and virtually on loan without being required to pay a dollar's interest to the United States Treasury something like forty-odd million dollars. I do not know precisely what it is, but it was fifty-odd millions not long ago and not much decreased now. I do not see why the people of the United States should be taxed to float a bond at 2 per cent when there are lying in the Treasury nominally but really in the national banks on loan three times that amount, more than three times that amount, probably, of the people's money which is not paying to the people one dollar of interest. It is always foolish to borrow money when one has money in bank. At the last Congress this House took the position that the deposits in the national banks ought to pay interest to the Federal Governmen, and tacked upon a bill then pending an amendment with that intent. The bill went to the Senate, or wherever it went. At any rate it has never been heard of any more. It seems that the interests which were desirous of procuring these further deposits from the United States Government were not anxious enough for further deposits to be willing to pay interest upon those deposits or upon those which they already had. If the proposed amendment to strike out that proviso shall be voted down by the House, then I shall offer another amendment, to which I wish to call your attention, and in order that you may understand it I will read the language of the amendment proposed and I will compare the language of that proviso with the language of the original act to which this act is supplemental. The proviso reads:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized, etc.

I shall move, if the motion to strike out the entire proviso is voted down, to strike out the word "shall" and substitute in its stead the language, "may in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury," so that it shall read:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized, etc.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know the gentleman has no intention of misleading the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, indeed.

Mr. MANN. But the House may think that language in regard to reimbursement was in the original act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I am just now going to call attention to the language of the original act.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reenforcement of the wisdom and the expediency of passing these two amendments, especially the one striking out the entire proviso, I will read the language of the original act. It may not impress you at first blush, but this act makes mandatory what the original act makes discretionary.

Section 8 of the original act read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required, moneys to defray the expenditures, etc.

It says "to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required." It was not made mandatory that he should do it. He was left at liberty to do it, and then to borrow it only from time to time, "as the proceeds might be required." Now, Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that the yellow streak in a gentleman is always the fear of being called or considered a demagogue, and I am aware of the fact that very frequently people will not push forward good legislation because they are afraid of that sort of charge. I have nothing in the world against national banks or against any corporation doing business lawfully under the laws of the United States. Even when I do not consider the laws themselves wise, I have nothing against those who avail themselves of the status of the laws to do business in an honest manner; but I do think that when every State in the American Union, as far as I know, makes it a point that for its moneys on deposit in banks it shall be paid interest—some of them the interest offered by the highest bidder who gives absolutely good security; some of them in depositories selected otherwise, but paying the rate of interest fixed by law—it is an abuse to lend fifty millions of the people's money (at one time very much more than that, but somewhat less another year) to people who are not necessitous people, not poor people, but to people who do not need it, without the payment of one dollar of interest. Some time ago we were all up in arms at the socialistic scheme of depositing in warehouses cotton, tobacco, corn, and wheat and giving a loan of 80 per cent of their value to the producers at 2 per cent interest. And now, every year, with the evil uncured and seemingly incurable, we lend money to the bankers of the country, and not only to the bankers of the country, but to a special class of bankers of the country—no State bank being allowed to come into this favored pool—whatever money we have, and when we need money to be expended for the very best possible purposes—to increase the commercial facilities of the Union, as this canal will, or to accomplish any other great purpose—everybody says at once, especially those who are afraid of being considered demagogues or of being considered as in an attitude of "making an attack upon vested interests" or something of that sort, that we must let the national banks and the money in the national banks alone, as if that money is not our money. I say that it is our money. We have a right to draw it out on our checks, just as I draw out my money on my check upon the Riggs Bank for the small amount I have on deposit there.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry of him? A number of gentlemen desire to know about how long this debate will last. I would like to know of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] about what time he thinks will be necessary?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I frankly confess to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that I myself have no idea in regard to that. The matter has been sprung suddenly. Nobody upon my side of this House has thus far asked me for any time. I suggest that the debate go on with the agreement that the previous question will not be called to-day, at any rate, and then to-morrow maybe we can arrive at some understanding.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no objection to that. All I wanted to know was whether probably to-day would be consumed by general debate. Does the gentleman think it will?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it will take all of to-day, I think.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having dwelt upon that matter sufficiently for the purposes which I now have in view, I want to call attention to another thing.

Section 3 of this bill reads:

That a detailed statement of the expenditures from this and subsequent appropriations for the construction of the isthmian canal shall be made annually to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has suggested to me an amendment which I think is a good one, and which I think ought to be added to the bill. You will notice that all that is provided for here is for a detailed statement of money already spent. There is not to be a detailed statement of estimates submitted to the Congress of the United States beforehand, to be passed upon, just as there are detailed estimates for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, detailed estimates for the Army, detailed estimates for the Navy, and all other work of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. In the last Congress the House passed a bill in reference to the Panama Canal covering a number of questions of the same sort which the gentleman has now suggested. That bill failed. The House and Senate conferees could not agree with reference to the abolition of the Isthmian Canal Commission. I say to the gentleman frankly, there is no question that not only should the Isthmian Canal Commission or the proper department make an estimate for expenditures, but there are a number of other details of that sort which ought to be provided for by law, and that matter will be brought out and called to the attention of the House undoubtedly at this session of Congress, and, I think, will become a law. All of those questions can not be very well covered in this emergency bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I differ in that regard——

Mr. MANN. I will say that I simply wished to explain to the gentleman. I think the gentleman himself will say that on a matter pushed into the House in this way, because of an emergency as to money, there ought to be fuller latitude given with reference to the necessary legislation, and there is necessity for legislation along several lines in that direction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the weight of the objection the gentleman makes, and I would not attempt to make this bill a long, cumbersome, detailed bill, correcting all the evils in connection with the operation of the Commissioners' work; but when I find a clause of the character which I have just read, providing for detailed statements of expenditures already made, it will require very little time from this House to adopt, and it will require no degree of previous committee training to prepare a needful and wise amendment. These are the words of the amendment which I wish to add to the bill: "And at the same time there shall be submitted to Congress a detailed statement and classified estimate of all moneys required for the next ensuing fiscal year." That is only one sentence. It is in strict analogy with all the work of Congress, and it is necessary in order that Congressmen may understand what they are doing when they make appropriations. It is time honored in our manner of carrying on the government. There is no reason why there should be any exception made in this particular case. On the contrary, this is entirely a matter of engineering and of exact mathematics, and they can more nearly make accurate estimates than can be made, for instance, by the Agricultural Department or the Department of Commerce and Labor. I wanted merely to say that. Now, in conclusion——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On this point that the gentleman now refers to, the gentleman will pardon me. The proposition which the gentleman makes may not cover all the case. It is quite a difficult thing to get this into a detailed statement of this sort. We now own the Panama Railroad and are operating it both in connection with the canal and as a commercial enterprise. Now the question would arise, as affecting the railroad company, as to whether they shall be required to make their amount of detailed statement which they can not exceed in this commercial business and if an appropriation is made, or whether they shall be permitted under certain restrictions to use their income, because it is a commercial purpose to carry on this road; and it is not a simple thing to answer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to mix up this; I take it for granted that the Panama Railroad is making a profit; if it is not, it is very lately that they have got on the other side of the ledger.

Mr. MANN. It is difficult to tell whether it is making a profit or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been one of the most paying properties in the world.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly the commercial property is profitable, but being used in connection with the work of the Commission it would not be easy to segregate the items.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment will not ask anything about that. I do not desire to mix this with the railroad business, and if the gentleman thinks that makes it apply to that, why he can offer any amendment which will cure that and it would be acceptable. The amendment is much easier to consider, and it requires much less labor to consider a simple amendment of this sort to this bill than to consider the bill itself. While I do not want to complicate matters, these various amendments I have suggested are proposed to be offered by me, and one of them by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] at the proper time, and I have taken the floor simply for the purpose of giving notice of them.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the House upon the fact that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] agrees with me, and agrees with all right-thinking men, that if there be an appropriation of $10,000 a year for the purpose of paying the salary of a press agent it is a "misappropriation of public funds," to use the language of the gentleman from Iowa.

I am glad, also, to learn if it shall be determined that there is a misappropriation of public funds of that description he will stand with us in refusing to pay the amount. Whether there be or whether there be not I do not myself know. In fact, I never heard of the matter in connection with the Canal Commission until this morning, and I wish here to say that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], having confessed that a payment of that sort, if there be one—an allowance of that sort, if there be one—is "a misappropriation of public funds," he can not in the same breath charge the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with acting "as a partisan" when he inquires about the fact. Certainly Republicans are just as much in favor of stopping misappropriations of public funds as the Democrats are; certainly Republicans are just as much in favor of the honest expenditure, the lawful expenditure, of public money and as much opposed to its unlawful expenditure as Democrats are, and certainly a Democrat is not to be arraigned for partisanship when he calls attention to a question of that sort. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There are two employees of the canal who receive each a salary of $10,000 a year. One is Mr. Ross, the purchasing agent in the United States. I do not think that he has anything to do with press agencies. One is Mr. Bishop, the secretary of the Commission. Whether, in addition to his other duties as secretary, he is press agent for the Commission I am not informed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Neither am I, frankly.

Mr. MANN. Certainly that is not his duty, but those are the only two employees receiving salaries of $10,000, and the Commission has no press agent employed at any salary whatever.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the course of this debate we wish to hear from the Commission upon that question, and I have no doubt they will communicate with us without being further urged thereto. They ought to.

Mr. MANN. We have a list of salaries here, and those are the only two employees receiving that salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand there is what is known as a publicity department. The name is a little sweeter, but the duties, I think, of the gentleman in charge of it would correspond to the designation which I gave it. Whatever that gentleman's nominal duties may be, his chief duties have been to distribute information about the work of this Commission to the representatives of the press in this city.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I have no doubt the secretary of the Commission does distribute information.

The only objection which I might make is that he does not distribute enough. He certainly has not distributed enough to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he yields the floor. Some months ago there was considerable talk in the press about open competition between the United States and foreign countries in supplying the machinery, supplies, etc., used in the construction of this canal. Can the gentleman inform the House to what extent machinery and supplies have been bought in open competition, and to what extent they have not, and what the line of procedure now is in that respect?

Mr. MANN. My impression is that there is open competition. As a matter of fact, nearly all of the modern machinery for the class of work which is done on the Isthmus is made in the United States. For instance, in the purchase from the French company we purchased a large number of French excavators. Our engineers have determined after experience that it is considerably cheaper for us to purchase new American excavators than it is to use the French excavators, because the reduction in the cost of excavation will much more than pay for the cost of the new machinery.

The CHAIRMAN. If no other gentleman desires to further debate the bill the Chair will direct that it be read by section under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I find that nobody on this side of the Chamber desires to participate in general debate at this moment. I suppose we shall have to go into the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. I understand that was the gentleman's proposition. I was in the cloakroom at the time.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; it was not my proposition. I asked the gentleman from Mississippi whether he thought that the debate would occupy to-day, and I understood him to say that that was his opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was.

Mr. HEPBURN. I made that inquiry because there were a number of gentlemen here who said they wanted to be present when the bill was being read by sections, but did not care to remain during the general debate. A large number of them have left the hall.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know, for no one spoke to me about it, but I thought there would be enough Members who wanted to talk upon the bill to occupy the day. I find no one on this side who cares to take part in the general debate, and I suggest now to the gentleman from Iowa that instead of going into a reading of the bill under the five-minute rule this evening, that we let the bill stand aside for the present and take it up in the morning when the Members are here who want to be present when the bill is read under the five-minute rule. I think it would not be right to take it up now after these people are gone.

Mr. HEPBURN. There are gentlemen on this side who desire to address the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no special word to the House on this subject, and I hardly think it is necessary at all, after the very exhaustive discussion of the subject by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] for me to even say a word. But I have had occasion, as well as I could for the last week or so, to look into the various items which go to make up the expenditures of the past and the estimates for the current fiscal year. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has given us notice that he would offer an amendment to reduce the amount of the appropriation. It is undoubtedly true that we might appropriate $1,000,000 and probably get along in a way until a deficiency bill could be reported and passed. It is true that we might appropriate $5,000,000 or $10,000,000, but there is no doubt that there will be required before the end of the fiscal year the amount proposed in this bill. It will not surprise me if the amount shall be increased before the end of the fiscal year. We are in this position, that the more money the Commission asks for which it can appropriately expend at this time the better pleased we are, because the faster the work progresses the sooner we will realize upon our total expenses.

We are purchasing large quantities of the implements for carrying on the work. There were $4,000,000 due on the 1st day of December for materials purchased. There will probably be three or four million dollars more due by the 1st day of January for materials purchased. These materials are to carry on the work. We buy new excavators, in addition to building the houses for the care of the laborers and the sanitary work. We not only have to buy new excavators, but to lay new railroad tracks; we reequip entirely the work in the canal in the way of new rails, new cars, new engines.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. CLAYTON. I want to ask the gentleman, as a matter of information, whether or not the work of the construction of the canal—that is, the excavation of the earth—has been begun?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the work of the excavation of the canal has never been discontinued. The new French company were carrying on the excavation of the canal when we purchased it. Their forces, instead of being disintegrated upon our taking control of the canal, were kept at work, and while the amount of expenditure for excavation has not been large in the total amount of expenditure, there has been expended for excavation work itself in the neighborhood of a million dollars or more to date.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman tell me, if he knows, how much of the proposed appropriation mentioned in the pending bill will be used in the actual work toward the construction of the canal—not for the purchase of material, but in the actual work?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean, by "actual work," digging?

Mr. CLAYTON. Digging—excavation of earth; yes.

Mr. MANN. That would probably be carried in the item in reference to the isthmian pay roll. The estimated isthmian pay roll—that is, the pay roll on the Isthmus from December 1 to June 30 next—is $4,875,000.

Mr. CLAYTON. And the balance of it will be expended for preliminaries to the work?

Mr. MANN. The balance of it is expended mainly in getting the plant together for the work.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman any more information as to what moneys are needed and what they are going to be expended for than is contained in that statement?

Mr. MANN. Well, I will say to the gentleman, of course I have not other data in reference to what is needed.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has no other information from the Commission than what is contained in the statement there as to expenditures?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have discussed the matter with officials of the Commission and with the Secretary of War, and I have been over the matter of this with the auditor of the Commission, who has charge of these bills and knows in reference to the amounts of the bills which are to be paid.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason I ask the gentleman the question is because the Commission has not seen fit, though they knew in advance that there was going to be need of this money, to give us any real information at all, and if the gentleman has gotten privately from them the information I shall stay here to hear from him, as I should like to hear it, and I believe the House would.

Mr. MANN. I would say to the gentleman that I have not received from the Commission an itemized estimate as to what these items are, and if I had the gentleman would not remain here to hear me, because I would be required, probably, to talk for a week. The gentleman understands very well that there are thousands of items in reference to these supplies.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman also understands that I did not expect that sort of a detailed statement, but I did expect something more explicit than what is given, which he himself nor no other Member has been able to explain.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I am afraid the gentleman has not read the estimate carefully. The estimate is not in terms which can not be readily understood and appreciated. The first item is an estimate of $4,000,000, estimated liabilities to December 1, 1905, covering the material ordered and in transit. I presume the gentleman read that item and said, "Why, there is nothing there to indicate what it is," and then dropped his eyes to the next numbered item; but the item does show what this $4,000,000 does show. "Fuel, $185,000." Now, they are accumulating and have to accumulate on the Isthmus—they have it on the way—a large quantity of coal to operate both their locomotive engines on the railway and their stationary engines in connection with their excavators. I do not know how they could be any more explicit without stating from whom they had purchased and to whom they had paid the money. "Explosives, $45,920." Now, it is true that they might have differentiated that item and said so much for nitroglycerin and so much for dynamite; but the gentleman himself, being nitroglycerin and dynamite, ought not to object to their consolidation in this item. "Household and office furnishings, $165,773." The item of course covers an immense quantity of articles, for furnishing not only the offices, which is a small item, but for furnishing the buildings both for the white labor and to a certain extent for the colored labor on the Isthmus, which we have to provide. "Lumber and lumber products, $957,061." That item might have been divided. It covers not only lumber for the building of the new buildings and for the repair of the old buildings, but principally, probably, or very largely at least, ties for putting in the new railroad tracks when they are put in, replacing the old railroad tracks, and for double tracking the Panama Railway.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois to answer a while ago, in reply to a question from me, that whatever part of this proposed appropriation of $16,000,000 would be used toward the actual work of excavation of the canal would be embraced in the item numbered 7, $4,875,000, being the total amount of that item, the item reading: "Estimated Isthmus pay rolls, from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, based on estimated pay rolls for November, with increase of 25 per cent from January 1, 1906, on gold rolls and 50 per cent on silver rolls."

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that if I made that statement I was mistaken about that. A portion of that is on other work on the Isthmus, but the bulk of it will probably be on the work of excavation now. It is proposed, I will say to the gentleman, to increase the amount of the common labor 50 per cent after the 1st of January; that is to say, they have what is known as a "silver" pay roll and a "gold" pay roll. The ordinary labor is done principally by negroes from the island of Jamaica. They receive their pay in silver and the white labor receives its pay in gold. The Commission estimate here that from the 1st of January on the railroad they will increase the silver pay roll 50 per cent between January 1 and June 30 and the gold pay roll 25 per cent. Most of that, of course, is in reference to excavation.

Mr. CLAYTON. For labor employed in excavating?

Mr. MANN. For labor employed in excavating.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, will the gentleman answer me one other question? How much of this item of $4,875,000 is used toward the payment of salaries of officials and the clerical force and help there?

Mr. MANN. Well, I say to the gentleman, not a very large amount.

Mr. CLAYTON. The answer of the gentleman, as I understand it, is that most of that item will go toward the pay of labor used in excavating the canal.

Mr. MANN. For labor used in excavating the canal and in preparation. I say to the gentleman a fair proportion of it will still be used in putting down railroad tracks which they are building there, in sanitation, and in other ways.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, will the gentleman tell me why there are these two rolls—the gold pay roll and the silver pay roll—and whether or not the pay under one is as much as under the other, and why the difference?

Mr. MANN. The silver pay roll has been the pay roll on the Isthmus always for the ordinary laborers. At the time we went down there silver was the money basis.

Mr. CLAYTON. What is the pay—if I may interrupt the gentleman—of a laborer under the silver pay roll who is engaged in excavating?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to tell the gentleman accurately what the pay is now, but a year ago the silver pay down there was from 15 to 18 cents per hour for ten hours of labor, the 15 cents of silver being worth about 7 cents in gold. I am told by the Commission, or by members in connection with the Commission, that since the eight-hour law went into effect——

Mr. CLAYTON. Of what coinage is that silver?

Mr. MANN. It is Panama money.

Mr. CLAYTON. Now, then, about the gold?

Mr. MANN. The gold pay roll is made up of the higher class of labor, not only the salaries of the officials of the administration, but of the higher class of labor. Practically the silver pays the cheap day labor.

Mr. CLAYTON. In other words, then, the American white people who go down there as officers and the like get their pay in gold, but the Santo Domingo negroes, or whatever negroes who are engaged in this work there as common laborers, get their pay in Panama silver. Do I understand that to be the fact?

Mr. MANN. All of the ordinary cheap labor, the work of real day labor, is paid in silver; the others are paid in gold. The gentleman understands very well some of those paid in gold are paid very well. An engineer in charge of an excavator receives over $2,000 a year in gold.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the Government of the United States buy Panama silver coined by the Panama Government from Panama and pay it to her laborers?

Mr. MANN. They arrange in some way about exchange there.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is unable to tell me how that is arranged?

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not tell him how it is arranged now; I believe they were buying it a year ago down there.

Mr. CLAYTON. You do not know what we give the Panama people for their silver, but you do know how much we pay to the laborers?

Mr. MANN. I can not tell you how much we give, because that varies from month to month. We buy it at the market price.

Mr. CLAYTON. We put upon the common laborers there the cheap Panama money, as I understand it?

Mr. MANN. We get our labor there of all classes just as cheaply as we can as a business proposition. If the gentleman desires to pay the cheaper laborers in gold and double their wages, he is permitted to make that proposition.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was making no proposition of the kind; I was simply trying to get information.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made an observation or I would not have made mine.

Mr. CLAYTON. I simply want information as to how the business of the Government is done there, and I want to understand how these expenditures occur. As the gentleman well knows, this bill has had no hearing before the Committee of the House——

Mr. MANN. Do not let the gentleman think I complain because he wishes information. If I can give him information, it is a pleasure.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman is always kind, and I have heretofore found frequent occasion to refer to the gentleman to be informed on matters that come from his committee, and this does come from his committee.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is always pleased to help the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. It should come from his committee, but it is a matter, unfortunately for the House, that has not gone to the gentleman's committee, and perhaps all of these questions would have been elucidated had it gone there. I am not complaining of the gentleman, but I am complaining of the action of the House in bringing in this measure and considering it here when it should have been better considered in the committee and all this information then brought out.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say on that point that I appreciate the fact that there ought to have been an estimate for an appropriation in the sundry civil bill last year. When I was attending to a matter from the committee last winter in reference to the Panama Canal, I ascertained that there was no estimate for an appropriation. I called the attention of a gentleman connected with the Committee on Appropriations to that fact, and was shown a letter from the former Isthmian Canal Commission stating that they did not need an appropriation because they had $130,000,000 of bonds to draw upon. I remarked at that time that it was almost funny that a commission which was appointed had never read the act organizing it, and that under the act creating the Commission they could not expend a dollar until it was appropriated. I also called the attention of the Commission to the fact that it ought to send in an estimate of appropriation last winter, so that the House would have plenty of time in which to consider it in the proper way and in the proper appropriation bill. But the Commission stated that they would not need the money.

Now that Commission has been removed. Since it has been removed and a new Commission appointed, the activity in reference to the canal has very greatly increased and the amount of expenditure has increased, so that while it is true that the gentlemen on the floor of the House have the right to criticise the bringing in of a bill at this time and in this way, still, having that right to criticise, and to feel that it is a subject for criticism, yet they will say as a gentleman very celebrated in the party of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] once said, "This is a condition; not a theory." The gentlemen now connected with the canal have no criticism upon them, and we all want the work to progress.

Now, if I can give any further information to the gentleman it will be a pleasure for me to do so.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman from Illinois has been very kind to answer my questions. The information sought by me has not been obtained very fully, but the gentleman has endeavored as best he could to answer, and I am satisfied. Had his committee had a hearing, he would have been able to answer more fully and more to my satisfaction.

But I desire with the gentleman's permission to ask one more question. I believe that so far we have expended the following amount in this work of building an isthmian canal, namely, $40,000,000 for the purchase of this right from the French Company—that is, for whatever rights it had—and then $10,000,000 to the Panama Government; and then $10,000,000 was appropriated for immediate use for the work on the canal in the last Congress, and now it is proposed to appropriate $16,500,000, if my mathematics be right, making $76,500,000. And I would like to know how much of the work of the canal has been done, and, if the gentleman can tell me, how much, probably, this canal is going to cost us. The gentleman is on that committee and he has had these hearings and he has studied the question, and I would like for my own information some light on the subject of what the eventual expenditure will be, having already spent $76,000,000 in a preliminary way.

Mr. MANN. I would be very glad indeed if I had time to go through with the gentleman some of the troubles which the Commission has met in reference to the type of construction. In my judgment, if the Commission shall proceed with the construction of a canal at a lock level of 85 feet, as proposed by the original preliminary commission, we will build the canal for less than the amount they estimated it would cost, which was $145,000,000, besides the amount we paid to the French Company and Panama. In my judgment, the level of the canal will be changed from an 85-foot level to either a lower lock level or possibly a tide-level canal. I do not think it can be changed to a tide-level canal without the authority of Congress, and there is no authority to indorse or to adopt any project which contemplates an expenditure of more than $145,000,000 from the beginning, exclusive of the amount paid to Panama and the French Company.

They have discovered, up to date, that by the use of new machinery the cost of excavation per unit is considerably less than the amount which was estimated for in the original estimate upon which we entered upon the project. In other words, they have discovered, for instance, that by the aid of compressed-air drills they can accomplish much more work. Gentlemen, understand that this excavated material has to be drilled and exploded. The French company, and we when we commenced, had ordinary hand drills which were used by the Jamaica negroes. They have introduced compressed-air drills, and a portion of the money which we are asking here to appropriate is for the purchase of 14 air compressors, in order to carry on the work of these compressed-air drills, which do the work of drilling at far less expense than can be done by hand. When the material has been exploded it has to be loaded into cars. The French company used a class of excavators much more expensive per unit than the excavators now being used. So that we can load the material into cars at considerably less than the original estimate. Then we are purchasing cars which will carry 40 to 50 tons, while the French company left us little dinkey cars and little dinkey locomotives. We are purchasing locomotives as large as are used in the United States, so that we can carry heavy train loads of the excavated material. The material all has to be carried by rail out of the canal cut and carried off to a distance and unloaded, and the carrying out of the material will be done at less cost per unit than we expected. And unless by lowering the level of the canal, which may be desirable, there be an increase in the amount of excavation, there will be paid for excavation, in my judgment, less than the amount we originally expected.

Now, the gentleman very naturally refers to the fact that after this appropriation shall have been made, if it be made, that $76,000,000 will have been spent or appropriated by the Government and no work done yet, or very little, in the way of excavation. It is much like any other business. If a man proposes to go into the manufacturing business or into the contracting business anywhere the first thing he does is to provide his plant. Very often the plant may cost from 25 to 50 per cent of the total cost of the entire work. Here the cost of the plant will not equal that; but in order to do this work properly and cheaply it is necessary to rebuild all of the railroad track down there. It is necessary to double track the Panama Railroad. It is necessary to put in new engines and new cars and excavators and air compressors. It is necessary to furnish quarters for those people who work there; to provide the plant in order to be prepared to do the work. Now, this is the situation: We have to-day 13,000 names of people on the rolls of the Isthmian Canal Commission down there, and in addition to that 4,000 on the rolls of the railroad company—practically 17,000 men. They estimate probably that 75 to 80 per cent of these men may be at work every day. They are like some other people whom the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] is well acquainted with. They do not report for work every day, and because of the great necessity to have labor on the Isthmus, the labor which is on the Isthmus is very independent. Each man knows that if he does not turn up to-day they will be just as anxious for his services next week, no matter what they tell him about turning up to-morrow; and to a certain extent we have been obliged to put up with that condition. Now, these 17,000 men, just as rapidly as the preliminary work is done, will be transferred to the excavation work—the real work which is to be done—and as that increases we will have before the middle of next year at work on the canal at least 25,000 men.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HINSHAW. Speaking of the character of the labor employed down there, is it a fact or not that the cheap labor of Santo Domingo or Jamaica is practically the only kind of manual labor that can be economically employed?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the Jamaica negro labor, which might include some from Santo Domingo, is practically the only cheap labor which up to date has been worth the pay down there or which has survived the work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A few minutes ago the gentleman stated that there were two men in this city employed by the Commission at a salary of $10,000 a year—one the purchasing agent and the other the secretary. The purchasing agent is responsible for the purchase of equipments and materials. I understand that that is his work.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what are the duties of the secretary?

Mr. MANN. Why, all the duties of the practical administrative officer here in charge of the offices. The chairman of the Commission receives a salary of $30,000 a year. Of course, Mr. Shonts is not practically in local charge of the administrative offices here, although theoretically so. He is engaged upon administrative work for the canal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I wish to ascertain is what sort of duties are performed by the secretary of this Commission that have resulted in his compensation being fixed at a larger sum than the salaries of the Cabinet officials who preside over the great Departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's position. I believe in meeting a matter of that sort with perfect frankness. The gentleman understands me about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman because he has had a great deal to do with this Commission on account of his connection with the committee that has had charge of this legislation pertaining to it; and I assumed that, from the gentleman's necessary visits to the office of this Commission and his investigations, perhaps he knew of some duties or some reason why a salary of this size, which I do not say now is improper, but which I think is very large, is paid to this man.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not able to say whether the gentleman who holds that position is worthy of a salary of $10,000 a year, or of 10,000 cents, or of 10 cents. The man who is secretary of the Commission is practically, by reason of that fact, in control, to a large extent, of the expenditure of money——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought there was an auditor.

Mr. MANN. To a certain extent he controls the work of the Commission here. If he does his work properly, as the secretary of a commission like this should do, if he is a man of the proper type, I do not say that this salary is too large. I know of no reason why Mr. Bishop should not be considered the proper man. It seems to me that he might well be worth $10,000. I do not see that we will ever be able to determine in this House, or elsewhere, in a legislative body, with reference to the construction of this canal, with exact nicety, whether one man is receiving a dollar too much or a dollar too little. We never will construct a canal costing us $150,000,000 on that basis. I have no criticism at all of the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman that it would be impossible for us to determine whether a man is receiving a dollar too much or a dollar too little; but I think we can pretty nearly determine whether an office official, located here in Washington, is receiving thousands of dollars too much or thousands of dollars too little. Now, if this secretary has supervision of all the work of this canal from this city, perhaps he deserves the salary he is getting; but I should like to have some comprehensive statement from somebody as to just what he does to justify this salary. I am not attempting to embarrass the gentleman from Illinois. I would not do it, because it would be very difficult to do it; but knowing the gentleman's superior information upon matters connected with the canal and the Commission, I thought perhaps he could enlighten the House upon that subject.

Mr. MANN. I think possibly the reason of the salary may be that it was considered necessary that some great man should be selected for this position, and hence they went to the city the gentleman represents, I believe, to secure this secretary. Of course it is not easy to get the best things out of New York, except in Congress, for a less salary than $10,000 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, I was under the impression that the gentleman to whom he refers was located here in Washington when he was selected for this position.

Mr. MANN. I have been informed that he was a New York newspaper correspondent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Located in Washington.

Mr. MANN. Well, he might be located in Washington, but——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, the personality of the individual who occupies the place, in my judgment, has nothing to do with it. The question here is, Are the duties of the office such as to justify a compensation of this size?

Mr. MANN. I say personally, in my judgment, the duties of the office of secretary of the Commission are such that in order to get the best qualified man for the place there ought to be a salary of at least $10,000 for a——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to have the gentleman tell me what he thinks a member of the Cabinet ought to have.

Mr. MANN. I think he ought to get more than $8,000 a year. Does not the gentleman from New York think so?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HINSHAW. If it should be eventually determined by Congress or otherwise that this should be a sea-level canal, will the work now being done and the materials purchased have been as economically and judiciously expended as if it had been known in advance just the character of a canal we were to have?

Mr. MANN. The material purchased will be the same in any event, whether it is a sea-level or a lock-level canal. So far as the work which is likely to be done for the next year or two is concerned, and perhaps longer than that, it will make little or no difference in the unit cost of the work whether it is finally a sea-level canal or a lock-level canal, for the reason that the work which is longest to be done, the work which is now being done, is excavating through what they call the Culebra cut, and that material comes out at whatever level the canal may be constructed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the inquiries of my distinguished friend from New York in reference to the secretary are along the line of some items which have appeared in some of the newspapers at times, giving the impression that the men employed by the Commission were receiving exorbitant salaries. I frankly confess to the House that I had the impression myself that probably there had been a tendency to create a great many places at rather high salaries. But upon investigation I do not find that to be the fact, so far as my judgment is concerned. The chairman of the Commission receives a salary of $30,000 a year. That is the largest salary. The engineer in charge receives a salary of $25,000 a year. Governor Magoon, who is one of the Commission, and who is governor of the Canal Zone, and also our diplomatic representative at Panama, receives a salary of $17,500 a year. The other Commissioners receive each a salary of $7,500 a year, but as to three of those a large portion of the salary is cut out on account of their being naval and army officers, and, of course, the salaries are not duplicated. The secretary of the Commission here receives a salary of $10,000. The general auditor receives a salary of $10,000. I said a while ago that there were only two who received salaries of $10,000—there are three. The purchasing agent receives a salary of $10,000. The deputy purchasing agent receives a salary of $6,480, but he is a United States naval officer, and the largest share of his salary comes from the Navy Department as a naval officer.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, we do not pay out that sum, but his salary is deducted from that sum?

Mr. MANN. He gets a total of $6,480. I can not say whether the Commission pays the total salary or whether he receives from the Commission excess over his naval salary, but he does not receive both; it does not cost the Government any more. Now, take the purchasing agent at San Francisco. He receives $5,076, but $4,076 comes from the Army, and he only receives the additional thousand dollars salary. The man who receives all the supplies on the Isthmus, who has charge of them and the responsibility whether they are received in proper order, and who keeps track of them, stores them in the warehouses, hands them out, gives directions, and takes control of them, received a salary of $6,000. But they had to put in a new man, and they could not get a competent one for less than $9,000. He is undoubtedly worth the amount. The chief sanitary officer on the Isthmus, Colonel Gorgas, gets a salary of $10,000. The chief justice and associate justices get salaries of $6,500 and $6,000, and the superintendent of the hospital gets a salary of $7,000.

The chief quarantine officer receives a salary of $7,000. One of the division engineers receives a salary of $6,000. The assistant chief engineer receives a salary of $15,000. The manager of labor and quarters receives a salary of $7,200. Another division engineer in construction receives a salary of $9,000, and another $7,500. There are a few more salaries, two or three, over $5,000, but of the salaries over $5,000 there are only twenty-six places under the Commission.

Now, that, in my judgment, is not an exorbitant sum or a large list of salaries for this class of work. I doubt whether there is a large corporation in the United States having transactions of such financial magnitude which does not have a salary list of this kind more than twice or three times as large as this.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois in making his statement reads from apparently quite an extended detailed list of officers and salaries. I would suggest the propriety, perhaps, of inserting that in the RECORD for the information of the House, if it relates to details in the bill. Will the gentleman do that?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad, in response to the gentleman, to insert in the RECORD the paper I read from, which purports to give a list of salaries of all of the members and employees of the Commission receiving more than $2,000 per annum, with this addition, namely, a statement from the auditor to the effect that the records have not been kept with the idea of determining salaries above the grade mentioned by myself in my request, and that therefore this report could not be immediately abstracted, but has been especially written for the purpose of replying to that inquiry, and that for that reason it is thought wise to carefully review the list and that that will be done at once when I shall be advised if there have been any errors or omissions made therein.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, we are to understand that this is a tentative statement and not final.

Mr. MANN. With that explanation I would be glad to insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. A further inquiry. Can we have a detailed statement of the expenditures of the Commission up to December 1, 1905, or not later than June 1, 1905, and if we can not, will the gentleman be kind enough to explain why?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, of course the Isthmian Canal Commission, like all other Departments of the Government, keep their books upon the basis of the fiscal year. It would be a very great expense to prepare a detailed statement of the expenditures from July 1 down to date, or at least a very considerable expense, and it would take considerable time. I asked the Commission to give me that data down to as late a period as they possibly could. Of course they could not give the data down to December 1, because the bulk of the money is paid out on the Isthmus. There is a disbursing officer here and there is a disbursing officer on the Isthmus. There is an auditor here and there is an auditor on the Isthmus. I have what is called "a detailed statement of expenditures" in considerably greater detail than the one which has been printed, down to June 30, covering twelve or fifteen pages, or possibly more, of large legal cap, which, if the gentleman desires, I would be glad to insert in the RECORD, although it only covers a detailed expenditure of $4,000,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would be glad, indeed, to have the gentleman insert it, and I think the House would also. Is the gentleman advised by the Commission whether or not they can give him a similar detailed statement coming down later than June 30, 1905, and, if so, about how far down and about when could we reasonably expect that, so that we can have it published for our general information?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is possible to obtain a detailed statement such as the gentleman wants. It would be possible to obtain any of these items probably separately, but it would not be possible, in my judgment, to obtain a detailed statement by the time that this bill will probably be acted upon in the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, that may be, of course, to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But at any time within the next few weeks is it contemplated by the Commission to give the House a thoroughly detailed statement of the expenditures, as near as may be, up to date—that is, since June 30, 1905?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me in that connection, the Commission, of course, has made an estimate for the next fiscal year. They have to have an appropriation for the ensuing fiscal year. That will come before the House, and I have no doubt that on account of there being plenty of time for that to be acted upon by the Committee on Appropriations the Commission will not only be willing, but will be anxious to furnish to the Committee on Appropriations and to the House a very full and complete detailed, and possibly itemized, statement of expenditures not only up to the present time, but up to the first of the year.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course the gentleman is not able to state now how soon we may expect that?

Mr. MANN. I am not able to state that.

Mr. Chairman, the necessity of this appropriation at this time is this: I understood the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to say—and I suppose he had his information—that it was necessary to have this appropriation to meet the pay roll of December 15.

I do not so understand it. The silver pay roll is paid twice a month, and the gold pay roll is paid once a month. There is money enough on hand, as I understand it, to pay the silver pay roll on the 15th of this month, but there is not money sufficient to pay either pay roll on the 1st of January, and the auditor and Commission inform us that it is necessary, in ordinary dispatch of business, to have this appropriation before the 15th in order to place in the disbursing officer's hands at Panama the necessary money by the 1st of January.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. It was stated here a while ago by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he contemplated introducing an amendment to this bill confining the appropriation to actual necessities that might prove to exist on the 1st of January. Would that be a wise amendment; and if not, why not? I ask purely for information.

Mr. MANN. I was explaining to the committee a while ago when my very distinguished friend from Alabama interrupted me (and I would yield anything for the purpose of carrying on a conversation with him) what this estimate was. The $4,000,000 of the first item is shown in the record to consist of items which are quite fairly itemized. Four million dollars, December 1, for materials which are in transit. The second item of that estimate is $3,350,000, and it shows exactly what it is for. Eleven hundred steel flat cars, a hundred and twenty locomotives, forty-three steam shovels, eighteen unloading plow machines, and other implements of that kind. That machinery is all contracted for——

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. I do not think the gentleman catches my question——

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes, I do.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. How would it embarrass the Commission or retard in any way the progress of the work if the appropriation should be confined to the actual necessities up to that time?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will pardon me. I think I understood him. This $3,350,000 is for material which is ordered and which we need. The Government is pushing the men to furnish it just as speedily as possible. As soon as these flat cars, engines, and other machines are on the ground the sooner the canal will be built. We are delayed now because we can not pay our bills. There has been bitter complaint made to the Commission, and, I think, with justice, that men who sold supplies to this Commission expecting to be paid when their goods were received in Panama and O. K.'d here, have not been able to receive their money. Now, these people are not anxious to furnish the material so promptly to us which we are pushing them for unless we are prepared to pay the money. The Commission can not tell just when this material will be furnished. They are egging the men on to furnish it as rapidly as possible, and probably if we do not pay our bills promptly it may affect, and will affect, the price of future orders.

Mr. GILBERT of Kentucky. It is not proposed not to pay the bills, but it is proposed to confine the appropriation to such sums as may be necessary to pay the bills; but as I understand all of the appropriation now sought in excess of about $5,000,000 is speculative in character.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not all; a large share is now needed, but that in the future is speculative to the extent that we do not know whether it will be furnished at once or whether it will be several months from now. They have contracted to deliver within a certain time, and we know we will have to pay them, and we want to be able to pay as soon as possible. Now, it seems to me that there is no objection to making a sufficient appropriation so that the credit of the Government is maintained beyond question. I grant to all of the gentlemen here that if this were the only occasion for consideration of appropriations to the Commission it would be wise to segregate the amount of the appropriation and only appropriate a portion now, so that the House would have a further opportunity of discussion upon the other appropriations, but there will be another appropriation bill before the House carrying another item for the Commission for the next fiscal year, and all of the questions which the gentlemen might wish to inquire about now will come up at that time properly, so that the House will still retain control over the subject of appropriations for the Commission.

All I wish to say in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, is that although my first judgment was the judgment which the gentleman from Mississippi has expressed—that there ought to be appropriated now only a sufficient amount to carry the Commission until some time in January and then let them rely upon a deficiency appropriation bill coming in the regular form—that after an investigation of this matter as well as I could make one during the time I have been in Washington, for some two weeks, I have reached the conclusion in my own mind that it is better, if we want the work to progress without hindrance and without discredit to the Government, to give the sum asked for now, retaining control, as we will, of the general subject on the appropriations for the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks the following statement, which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] asked to have printed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to print certain statements. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[a] Prior to April 1 expenses of machine shops were distributed to the division of the work receiving the benefit of the work done by machine shops.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I should hesitate very much to offer an amendment to a bill of this kind if I did not know that I was doing it with the consent of the gentleman in charge of the bill. In order that my remarks may perhaps be more clearly understood, I will send the amendment to the Clerk's desk, to be read for information, as the text of the amendment which I propose to offer, or am considering the wisdom of offering to-morrow, or whenever the bill shall come up for action.

The CHAIRMAN. As the time for amendment has not arrived, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] will be read for information only.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 1, and insert in place thereof the following:

"That every national banking association having United States bonds on deposit to secure its circulating notes shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of its notes in circulation, and such taxes shall be in lieu of all existing taxes on circulating notes of national banking associations: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to circulating notes secured by bonds issued under the following titles, or any reissue of such bonds bearing the same rates of interest: Loan of 1908 to 1918, authorized under act approved June 13, 1898, and bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; funded loan of 1907, authorized under acts approved July 14, 1870, and January 20, 1871, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum; loan of 1925, authorized under act approved January 14, 1875, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum."

Three years ago, when the original Panama bill was passed, I called the attention of certain members of the Senate, the day after it was passed there, to the fact that bonds were authorized as 2 per cent bonds, but required to be sold at not less than par, and it would be impossible to sell them at par as a basis for circulation with a 1 per cent tax, and from that time to this the effort has been made to have that mistake corrected.

I hold in my hand the advance copy of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, issued to-day, and which the Members will find in their mail this evening, I suppose. I will read one clause from it, as follows:

By act of Congress approved June 28, 1902, an issue of bonds was authorized in aid of the isthmian canal now in process of construction. The act provides that the bonds shall bear interest at 2 per cent, and shall not be sold below par. In former reports I have called attention to the fact that these bonds, if now issued, would not be available as security for national-bank circulation at a less rate of taxation than 1 per cent per annum, and, therefore, would not be worth par. I believe a general statute should be enacted making all future issues of the Government bonds available for national-bank circulation subject to a tax of but one-half of 1 per cent, as in the case of the consols authorized by act of March 14, 1900.

Now, the amendment which, as I stated, is offered by the consent, at least, of the gentleman in charge of the bill, will do precisely, and nothing more, than that which is asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report to-day. It distinctly exempts the threes and fours outstanding, and covers 2 per cent bonds hereafter issued. It covers also the privilege of reissue, and that is the particular reason why I offer it. Within eighteen months we shall have the termination of the first period of the $115,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds now outstanding. The Government would save a large amount in interest if this tax which it is now proposed to apply to the Panama bonds shall apply to these also in their extension. It will also cover thirty-five millions of 3 per cent Spanish war bonds, which will expire in thirty months. In both of these instances the Treasury Department has the right of option of extending them—the 4 per cent indefinitely, the 3 per cent for ten years.

Now, it is apparent to the business sense of every Member of this House that if the Secretary of the Treasury did not wish to pay the $115,000,000 4 per cent bonds, but did have it in his power to say to the holders of these bonds, "We will extend them, at discretion, at 2 per cent interest, with the additional feature of having it possible to use them as a basis of circulation at a tax of one-half per cent," he would have the power in his own hands to protect the interests of the Treasury so far as these two issues of bonds are concerned.

Now, I want to be perfectly frank with the House and to state that there is another issue of bonds which would be made available for bank circulation besides these two, a bond which has been authorized, but which has never been issued. And I think that every Member of the House, on both sides, will concur with me and with the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury as well, that this change be made so far as those are concerned. I refer to the authorized bond for the maintenance of the credit of the Government which bears 3 per cent interest and a one year's term. No such bond has ever been issued, but no human being can tell how soon or how far in the future the issue of that bond may be required. And I submit it to you that it will be impossible to sell a 3 per cent bond at par under the circumstances in which such sale would necessarily be made, unless it could be used as a basis for circulation by the banks, at the reduced rate of tax.

The amendment excludes the present issue of 3 and 4 per cents, but includes the reissuance of those bonds at lower rates, which would enable the Secretary of the Treasury to reissue, under the option he has, at 2 per cent instead of 3 and 4, and also includes the Panama bonds as well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand the gentleman as to the last class of bonds he refers to—when they were issued.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. They were authorized to maintain the gold reserve and the credit of the country, but never have been issued, and I hope that the necessity for such issue will never arise.

Mr. BOUTELL. And they were limited to $100,000,000.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. And limited to only one hundred millions. I think it is perfectly apparent to every gentleman that they can not be sold at par, and the law forbids their being sold at anything less. There is no question about that. I dislike very much to bring in a proposition about banking into this House in view of my past experience.

Mr. MANN. Permit me to say to the gentleman that he need not interject it upon this bill.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I do not want to interject it; but some gentlemen may not be aware of the fact that the great bulk of the bank circulation is based on the 2 per cent bonds, and these will continue to be used as the basis of circulation. Now, as a matter of fact, the supply of 2 per cent bonds is about exhausted; practically all of them are held for bank circulation. Possibly there may be from thirty to fifty millions in the market, but I am perfectly satisfied, gentlemen, that the 2 per cent bonds are being controlled and manipulated because of the shortage of supply. I am satisfied of it, and I think the very wisest possible course that Congress can take in regard to this matter is to make this a general statute, which the Secretary of the Treasury asks for, in order that at least that thing may be controlled and prevented. I will be glad to answer any question any gentlemen may desire to ask.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question or two?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. Are not we as Members of the House seeing the effect of taking up and disposing of a measure without having it properly go to a committee; that we are first legislating on matters pertaining to the Appropriations Committee, and next to the Ways and Means Committee, then to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and now finally landing in the Banking and Currency Committee, seeking to make a general statute recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report to us a part of emergency legislation? Does not the gentleman from Connecticut think that it would be wiser in this House at this time to pass an emergency appropriation for a limited amount to meet the urgent necessities of the case?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would state in reply to the gentleman's question that the Committee on Banking and Currency would have nothing to do with the proposition referred to in this bill or the amendment I am offering. The amendment is purely a question with which the Committee on Ways and Means would have to deal, relating solely to taxation and the bonded debt, and it has been referred to the Ways and Means Committee. The reasons why the amendment is offered are, because the Secretary of the Treasury distinctly and specifically recommends it, and it is only a change of form and not of principle from that recommended in the pending proposition. If the bill was not here relating to the Panama bonds the amendment would not be offered with reference to the others. I think the gentleman's question is fully answered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ought we in this Panama bill to deal with any other bonds except the Panama bonds?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Instead of doing it for this specific issue, it might be made general law, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury as set forth in a bill which I introduced day before yesterday, but I submit it to Members here for their consideration whether it would not be wise to make general that which it is now proposed to make specific. By doing so it would create a saving of several million dollars in interest in the next few years. I think when the Government option of extension matures that the interest on the 3 and 4 per cent bonds can be reduced to 2 per cent by making this a general statute. That is the whole proposition.

Mr. PRINCE. Do I understand the gentleman from Connecticut, then, that he now seeks to withdraw this question?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, no; not at all. I leave it open for consideration to-morrow.

Mr. PRINCE. The gentleman insists upon it?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It is the substitution of one form for another.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Secretary of the Treasury was in favor of the action which he speaks of.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I read the statement in which he said he advised it.

Mr. MANN. But he has not made any request that it be acted upon in this bill.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. He is out of the city and could not make any such recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. This same proposition that is in this bill was submitted in person to the Secretary of the Treasury himself, and he made no suggestion in reference to the matter which the gentleman offers.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I went to the Treasury Department to-day, and the Assistant Secretary told me that the Secretary was out of the city, but that he would be glad to have this proposition enacted. I will add, furthermore, that when this proposition was pending last year the Secretary of the Treasury distinctly recommended it. I have his letter in my pocket recommending it, and I will state that the verbatim language in the amendment was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by him.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that, but I want the House to understand, which it might not understand from the gentleman's statement, that the Secretary of the Treasury does not ask that it be done on this emergency appropriation bill. He has not asked that a change of the current law with reference to bonds be made in that way.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, I do not know anything about that. I submitted the amendment to the gentleman in charge of the bill before I offered it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I know of no other gentleman who desires to participate in the general debate, and I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that a good many of the Members on both sides have been under the impression that the bill would not be read for amendment until to-morrow morning, and for that reason it would be better to have unanimous consent—I will not intrude by asking it myself if the gentleman will ask it—to let the bill go over without detriment, to be read under the five-minute rule to-morrow morning, the first thing after the approval of the Journal, and continued in due course until finished.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman, why not have the first section read for amendment, which will, of course, end the general debate, and then commence to-morrow morning on that section?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can get unanimous consent, no doubt, to have it go over.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask that the first section of the bill be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, are we going to continue the reading?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether there has been any understanding that the bill shall go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; there has been none, but I am trying to get an understanding. There was an understanding on the part of a great many Members of the House that the bill could not possibly reach consideration under the five-minute rule to-day. I was partially responsible for that understanding, which turns out to be a misunderstanding, and the gentleman from Iowa in charge of the bill will see that some Members, in consequence of what we expected, thought they could go home, and they will be taken rather by surprise if the bill is read for amendment this evening when they are not here.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am only asking that the first section be read, and then I will move to rise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if the first section is read, all amendments to that section will be cut off.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no; we will not proceed to the next section. It will be open for amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, amendments to the first section will be in order to-morrow morning?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Quite a number of Members have made arrangements to go away to-morrow morning, with the understanding that the bill would be finished to-day. I merely make that suggestion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The difference is that there was no reason for their having that understanding—none under the sun. They arrived at it unaided and unassisted. These other gentlemen have arrived at their understanding by being misled.

Mr. OLMSTED. It seems that the gentlemen I refer to were right in their understanding that it could be finished to-day if it were proceeded with under the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. This illustrates the folly of leaving the House when a bill is pending. If gentlemen will all understand here at the opening of the session that a vote is liable to be taken at any time in Committee of the Whole, or that a bill is liable to be voted upon at any time, and will regulate their business in accordance with the business of the House, it will be a great deal better for all concerned. I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa that we read the first section and then stop there, leaving it open for amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we have as full an attendance here now as we will have to-morrow. There are a great many Members in the Capitol who are not on the floor, and there is no reason for postponing a vote on the matter until to-morrow on account of the absence of Members.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know of several Members myself who have gone home.

Mr. TAWNEY. There will be a great many more who will not be here to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They will have full notice to be here to-morrow.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make any request with regard to the postponement of the subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without detriment and that it be taken up the first thing to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal under the five-minute rule, to be read for amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEPBURN. I raise the point of order that the Committee of the Whole can not give unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request; it escaped me for the moment that we were in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the first section can be read and then a motion made for the committee to rise. If no Member wishes to debate the bill, the Clerk will read.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, as I may not be able to be here to-morrow, I would like five minutes to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to debate the bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to debate the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennslyvania is recognized.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I am as fully aware as any Member of this House of the great importance to the country of the construction of this isthmian canal. I am fully aware of the urgent importance of action upon this measure at this time, but I desire also to record my protest against this House being so often called upon from time to time to vote upon this great and important matter without being more fully advised, in appropriating large sums of money, as to the details of expenditures of moneys which have already been made.

Now, we are told that there have been expended the sum of $8,950,092.15 of a former appropriation, but I defy any Member, from the statement which has been submitted here, presumably coming from the Commission itself, to tell in what way or for what purpose, except in the most general manner, that money has been expended. For instance, the very first item is this: "Isthmian Canal Commission, $185,256.98." Whether that was for salaries or traveling or other expenses of the Commission, how much for either or both, or what it was expended for, no Member on the floor of this House knows. The next item is "Special commissioners, $18,265.90." Some one may know the full meaning of that term; I do not. Then we find the item "Office of administration, $102,012.76." I defy anybody to tell me what that means.

Mr. MANN. That is very easy. It means the payment of the administration of the office here.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman tell me the distinction between that and the first item, "Isthmian Canal Commission, $185,000?"

Mr. MANN. That pays the salaries of the Isthmian Canal Commission and this pays the administration force of the Commission here.

Mr. OLMSTED. "The administration force." Then the disbursing officer, I take it, is a part of the administration force, and yet he gets a separate $32,826.28 for something we are not told what.

Mr. MANN. The administration force of the Commission is like the salary for secretary's office over here, which we constantly appropriate for, and then we appropriate money for auditor and disbursing officer, which is part of the administrative force.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I find the item, "Executive office, $52,371.89." Whether that is for salaries or expenses, or for what purpose it was expended, we do not know. Then we have the item, "Administration of justice, $22,886.35." What that is for we have not the slightest idea.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman knows that that is for the administration of justice—the payment of the salaries of judges, etc., in the Canal Zone. The gentleman knows that, I think.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I find this item, "Department of construction and engineering"—and this foots up—"Office of the chief engineer, $209,000." Whether that is for salaries or what it covers we are not told. The only item which we can definitely understand is the purchase of the Panama Railroad stock, $155,657.49. That is specific, except we are not told how much they purchased nor what price they paid for it. I had one more specific item which I had lost for the moment. Here it is: "Canal construction, $1,010,014.62." Now, I supposed that that whole appropriation—the whole eight millions—was, in a sense, for canal construction. There is the item of expenditure, but we do not know how much of that went for salary or wages or material or what any of it was paid for. Then we have "Material and supplies purchased, $2,091,258.72." Isn't that a part of canal construction? Next we have "General purchasing officer in Washington, $39,890.57." Now, was that for things that he purchased or was it for salaries of men in his office? Next there are assistant purchasing agents at other places. Then we have "Division of material and supplies, Isthmus, $342,381.07." Is that for salaries? Is it for wages? Is it for materials, or what on earth is it for? The mere explanation that it was expended for the "division" is not clear. Next we have this singular item, "Freight, advertising, etc., $144,085.23." Who ever heard or saw in an account of expenditures the grouping together of two such incongruous items as freight and advertising? How much was for freight and how much was for advertising? Why are we not informed?

Mr. Chairman, we are in these days insisting upon great publicity in the affairs of corporations, and very properly so. Recent events have shown the importance of demanding such publicity; but I say that there is no corporation in the country whose stockholders would be content with an accounting of the expenditure of $8,000,000 which was no more full, no more detailed, and no more specific than this account of expenditures which has been rendered to us by this Commission. I find that the salaries and wages estimated for October and November amount to the sum of $60,000—$30,000 a month—here in Washington. Certainly, with such a force as that, there is ample ability and force of men to prepare a statement which could be laid before this House showing in detail what has been done with our money. I do not mean to reflect upon any officer of the Government or any member of the Commission. I am going to take it for granted this time that this money has all been properly expended. I believe it has been, but I do think that in a matter of this importance, an enterprise that is going to cost such a vast sum of money, do the best we may, we ought to have a most careful accounting for every dollar that we appropriate. I have thought of offering an amendment to that effect. If I am not here when that section is decided I am sure the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] will offer such an amendment, and I sincerely hope that when it is offered to the third section of this bill it will be adopted by the House, so that as to the appropriations we are about to make we will hereafter receive a full, detailed, and classified statement of expenditures.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I desire to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] that I think he will find in connection with the report of the Secretary of War which is now in the hands of the President, and which will be transmitted to us at a very early date, all of that information that his soul craves.

Mr. OLMSTED. I hope that is so, Mr. Chairman, but it certainly is not in the statement of expenditures which has been given to the House as the basis of our action upon this bill. There is no requirement of law that it shall be in the report of the Secretary of War, and in any event it will come too late to be of service so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, at the outset permit me to say that I concur in all the criticism indulged in by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]. He criticises these items of expenditures already made up to September 30, 1905. He is correct in saying that no corporation or business firm in the country would be content with that sort of a statement rendered by its fiscal officer or agent as to the manner in which he had used the funds of that corporation or business concern. It shows to my mind, Mr. Chairman, a want of business methods in the conduct of the building of this canal. It shows to my mind that the money of the people may be used to some extent for unnecessary purposes, for experimenting, for exploiting some particular man, some newspaper man, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has suggested—a press agent. Now, we want to know and the country is entitled to know, not in a general way how the revenues have been expended, but in a specific and definite way how the party in power is expending the moneys of the public. Now, this case illustrates the folly, I might say, of this House undertaking to legislate on a matter as important as this without having the measure first considered by a committee. What Member of this House can know about this? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was asked questions, and he confessed again and again that he could not explain matters pertinent to this important discussion. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is correct in his criticism. It may be that all of these items were properly expended. I do not know. I do not know for what these items grouped together under general terms were expended. Now, what he has said relates to what has already been expended, and his criticism is well taken. I desire to direct further criticism to the expenditure of the $16,500,000 which it is now sought to have us appropriate.

Now, for what purposes are we going to appropriate $16,500,000? In a general way we are told for preliminary expenses, for hospitals, and for houses and the like of that. If this matter had gone to a committee and there had been an investigation we would have found out how much hospital money was necessary, how many houses were necessary, and what other items were necessary. I do not know what the general statements mean. Under subdivision 3 in the second column, page 40 of the RECORD, "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, $2,300,000." Does any man on this floor have any idea of what these materials are, for what that money is to go?

Mr. MANN. The items are right there.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is simply in general terms.

Mr. MANN. It is specified what it is.

Mr. CLAYTON. "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in the United States, December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906." What sort of miscellaneous material? For what purpose? You have specified a whole lot of materials and now you bring in a sort of omnibus clause under the head of miscellaneous expenses. I want to know what these miscellaneous matters consist of which calls for this money. Then you take the next one, item 4, "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases on the Isthmus and miscellaneous expenditures from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, consisting of hotel and hospital and other supplies, transportation of laborers from West Indies, etc., $800,000."

I would like to know more particularly about that. And then you come now to item 7, for I can not now undertake to criticise each one of these omnibus clauses in this so-called estimate of expenses, but take item 7. "Estimated Isthmus pay roll from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, based on estimated pay rolls for November, with increase of 25 per cent from January 1, 1906, on gold rolls and 50 per cent on silver rolls." And yet, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the long statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, I am still in the dark as to how much of this money is going to be spent on the actual work of constructing the canal. The gentleman says that it was estimated that it would cost a hundred and forty million dollars to complete this canal; that without further legislation of Congress no more than that could be spent for that purpose. Well, we have already appropriated, if this bill passes through, including $10,000,000 heretofore appropriated, $26,000,000 out of the hundred and forty million dollars for the work of construction, to say nothing of the forty millions paid to the company from which the canal was purchased and ten millions to the Panama Government. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of all this money? To what use it is going to be devoted? I know I am heartily in favor of building an Isthmian Canal, but we want to go about it in a businesslike way. We want to know what we are doing and how the people's money is being expended and how it is proposed to expend it.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. Under section 3, estimated miscellaneous material purchases in United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, does that mean they have to purchase in the United States notwithstanding they might pay more than they could get it for elsewhere?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not know. The gentleman from Kentucky will have to ask the whispering winds, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the committee could not answer that. We do not know; we are in the dark.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first time, I believe, during my limited service here in this House that we have been called upon to vote upon so important a matter, to vote so much of the peoples' money without accurate and definite information as to what has been done with some of that money, and as to what will be done with the money for which we are asked to vote, except in one case, and that was in the great emergency that confronted the country at the beginning of the Spanish war, when that great heart lived in the White House and every patriot here voted to put into his hands $50,000,000 as an emergency war fund. We could not in time of war wait for itemized statements, we are willing to trust our President, but here in time of peace, in purely a business matter, involving business questions, no emergency, with nothing of extraordinary nature confronting us, why this matter should be rushed through without explanation I demand to know.

I demand to know, to have more information about these items. What will this money be used for? Here are $26,500,000, that we appropriated and to be appropriated, of the proposed $140,000,000. How much work has been accomplished and how much will be accomplished by this? It may come to pass, Mr. Chairman, if we go on from time to time without due investigation, without any inquiry into this, we will find ourselves confronted with this condition, namely, that we will have spent $140,000,000, and most of it will have been expended upon items headed "Miscellaneous expenditures," and that then the canal will hardly have begun to be constructed. It illustrates the unwisdom of putting such a measure as this through at this time without due investigation.

There is a matter as important in the estimation of the country and more urgent in the minds of the people than this, and yet that is not brought forward by the party in power. That is waiting for the regular course; that must wait until after recess; that can wait at least until after the committees are appointed. I refer to the demand of the country for the regulation of the great transportation companies, to prevent the inequalities, the injustices, and the discrimination practiced by them against the producers, consumers, and shippers as well as the traveling public. That I consider a question just as important and as urgent as this, and the party in power will take time to deliberate upon it. But when it comes to this matter of expending sixteen millions of the money of the people, you bring in a measure here without reference to the committee and largely under the head of "Estimated miscellaneous expenses." I am complaining of the attitude of this House in asking us to vote for a measure without having the explanation. We ought to have it, and I register this protest and criticism. It is unbusinesslike, it is unfair to the country, and it is unfair to the membership of this House. This matter ought to be investigated, elucidated, and explained, so that all might know exactly for what they are voting. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I would be glad if there could be a more detailed statement before the House at this time. I have no doubt but that a detailed statement is in the report of the Secretary of War. But I submit to the gentleman that there is no great innovation in this particular matter of estimates, only the sum is a larger one than usual. Take, for instance, the Book of Estimates with regard to appropriation for river and harbor improvements, as follows:

Improving the Black Warrior and Tombigbee rivers: For continuing improvements by the construction of locks and dams Nos. 1 and 2 in the Tombigbee River and the completion of Lock and Dam No. 1 in the Tombigbee River, near Demopolis, and Nos. 2 and 3 in the Black Warrior River, next above, and for the construction of bridges and lock houses as authorized.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. The information is that the committee had those items under investigation. They had the report——

Mr. HEPBURN. Here is the Book of Estimates as it is furnished by the War Department.

Mr. CLAYTON. And the committee gave a hearing on those items.

Mr. HEPBURN. They might have done so and they might not. I am speaking of the estimate and the form in which the estimates are made. Has the gentleman from Georgia information as to the cost of Dam No. 1 and Lock No. 2, and how much concrete there must have been, and how much of timber, and how much of labor, and how much of engineering? Those matters are never included in the estimates. The bulk sum is given, and that is done here. I think they might have adopted a different plan, and there might be connected with every estimate a detailed statement of every expenditure if a letter should have been addressed to a contractor with the necessary postage stamps. Then it might properly be included in the estimates that might be considered; but it has never been done. It is not the custom. When estimates are made they are made in this form. Here are 100 items of various amounts estimated for by the Secretary, and substantially the same language is used. There is nothing of a definite nature. It is not expected of them that the Congress will be informed in regard to every matter of this kind. Something is left to the engineer in charge; something of credibility rests on his statement.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. Surely.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman find in there any item as uncertain as this: "To equipment purchased or contracted for delivery not later than June 30, 1906?"

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know. I have not investigated.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman find anything in there as indefinite as this: "Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in the United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906?"

Mr. HEPBURN. Here, for instance, is an item I pick up at random: "Construction of keepers' dwellings, Sunken Island Station, St. Lawrence River, New York, $5,000." How indefinite that is. Now, probably, the gentleman would like to know something of the style of architecture, whether it is Gothic or something more modern than that, or whether the Queen Anne style would be preferred. It might be wise and proper to gratify curiosity in that way; but in this department, in making estimates for these expenditures, that kind of minute detail is never indulged in. It is supposed that when the proper officer was authorized to construct this keeper's dwelling, that there was a limit upon him to keep within the expenditure of $5,000, and that as an honest officer he would do with the money what was best for the interest of his Government. Something has to be assumed as to the integrity of the individual instrumentality by which these works must be carried on.

Now, these gentlemen know what they want to expend during the year—what is necessary to carry on the work. Suppose there was a detailed estimate made. So many thousand dollars for cement, so many thousand dollars for sand, so many thousand dollars for the other materials necessary to make concrete, so many thousand dollars for labor in the preparation of this material at one point, so much at another point. What would this House know as to whether or not these estimates were rightful? Will the gentleman insist that if they were made he, as a Member of the House or as a member of the committee, would take them up item by item, figure out the amount, learn somewhere else the unit of probable cost, and base his judgment upon that? No one would pay any attention to these details if they were given. We have got to rely upon these officers. If they are honest men, then a mistake has been made. If that is true, neither the guardianship nor the watchful care or scrutiny of the gentleman from Alabama or myself can prevent dishonesty. It lies inherent in the personality of the man who has the discretion, and who in the nature of things must have discretion.

These estimates are made by men that have been selected for the purpose of this great work. The responsibility is upon them. They are scrutinized by the officers of the War Department. They have the confidence of those officers. In turn, the President of the United States, charged with the responsibility, upon whose shoulders rests all the responsibility of the selection of men to select the right instrumentalities—the man who above all others will suffer if there is dereliction of duties and failure to perform on the part of those selected by him—he, in turn, has given that scrutiny that it was possible under the circumstances for him to give; and so they come down to us in that way. I confess that it might have been better if infinitely more of detail had been indulged in. It might have been better if I and the gentleman from Alabama had information about these particular items of conjectural expenditure; but we would have known no more had we had them. What does he or I know about the cost of construction there? What does he or I know of the state of the market of materials here in the United States or in the markets where these particular things must be bought? It might have been better for us; but, after all, I think it would serve no useful purpose, for probably neither he nor I would have looked on them except in the cursory manner in which men examine details of that kind.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then, in view of the profound ignorance which, I take it, the gentleman's admission attributes to the membership of this House, we can not know anything about anything, and we must simply take the estimates furnished by the Departments. What is the use, then, of having committees to investigate any of these things? Why not take the estimates of the Departments on everything and put them through without the intermediary of a committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. As a rule, that is what is done. The estimates of the Departments, as a rule, govern, and it is only in exceptional cases, where unusual information is within the reach of gentlemen, that there is investigation other than that which produces any practical result.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask the gentleman's attention to this language:

I earnestly recommend to the Congress the need of economy, and to this end, of a rigid scrutiny of appropriations.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. Would the gentleman regard that, then, as superfluous?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I think this is rigid scrutiny. I think this is as complete scrutiny as would be given under any circumstances. I think there is no man in this House who would set his judgment against the judgment of this board of engineers with regard to the necessities of an appropriation for a given work. We would accept what they are bound, under the law of the land and under the law of honor, to give to us here truthfully.

Mr. COCKRAN. I just merely wanted to ascertain what the gentleman conceives to be the duty of the House. By scrutiny of appropriations does the gentleman mean a scrutiny of what these officers say or a scrutiny for themselves of the necessities of government?

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand it to be that scrutiny that business men would make of a given expenditure in which they were about to engage, and I undertake to say that if a railway corporation or any other great corporation appoints its engineers to conduct a certain improvement, when those engineers have carefully considered that matter and have made their report, as business men the board of directors would act upon that report of the man whose duty it was to make it, and to make it honestly—the man who had been selected because of his integrity and his wisdom to make it—and it would be insolence, I think, on the part of nonprofessionals who happen to sit upon that board to say without something to attract their suspicions that their judgment was better than that of the expert whom the wisdom of all had called to engage in the enterprise.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman will, of course, understand that I merely seek to have his views on this subject for the benefit of the House. I would like to know what the gentleman desires us to understand is the business of Congress. Is it to accept the figures contained in the estimates and, using his own expression, that it would be impertinent to verify those figures by independent inquiries by a regularly appointed committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I have no desire to inform the gentleman upon any subject of that kind.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, I ask the gentleman's attention then to this: Take the case he presents, where a board selects its own agents to make inquiries of a technical character, and acts upon that report. Does he consider that analogous to the action of a department of the Government, called upon to exercise its judgment on the actions, not of its own agents, but of appointees of another department?

Mr. HEPBURN. In a sense these men are our appointees. We have invested the President with the power to make these selections. The President has made the selections. I believe that he has been wise in the selections. These men whom he has selected have been engaged in the performance of this duty. They are learned upon this subject and familiar with it. I at least for one am not. I would regard it as insolent for me to put my judgment upon a great subject of engineering of which I have no knowledge at all against that of a man recognized throughout the world as great and eminent in his profession.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to participate in this debate; but it seems to me that the question is now put upon a plane where every Member of this House must ask himself and his colleagues a very important question. If the enactment of this measure in this very unusual manner is justified by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] upon the ground that the House of Representatives, in exercising the power of appropriation, can not scrutinize the estimates of an executive office without exposing itself to an imputation of insolence? And insolence in a legislative body closely approaches treason to its duty.

I can not understand what function is left to us if we are to be considered impertinent when we ask any officer for an explanation of the reasons why millions of dollars should be taken from the Treasury. If putting and pressing that very inquiry be not our function, why, we have no function. It would be idle to call such a meaningless performance as the gentleman from Iowa describes a duty or a power. Nothing could be more ridiculous than to require this body to solemnly enact a law in order to justify the expenditure of money if the extent of our duty and our power is simply to express our approval of whatever the engineers of the War Deparmtent or any other officer may certify.

Mr. Chairman, just conceive the position in which we are placed. We are asked to appropriate $16,000,000, an amount larger than the entire revenue of a great many States, and it is asked to do it upon a piece of paper that not one man in the House can undertake to explain. If there be impertinence anywhere, let me submit to the gentleman from Iowa that it does not lie in scrutiny of estimates by Members of this House, but it lies with those who deny the right of this House, charged with the public purse, to satisfy itself in advance of any appropriation as to the necessity of every expenditure, the direction in which it will go, and the grounds on which it is asked. [Applause.]

What is the precise status of the measure before this body now? The gentleman from Iowa, among the most distinguished Members of the House, one of its brightest ornaments, stood on the floor this morning and vindicated the right of his committee to take charge of this bill. On what is the right of a committee based to take charge of a bill before this House? Upon the assumption that the committee can prosecute more efficiently than the whole House inquiries into the reasons offered for its enactment, and that the result of those inquiries will be spread before all the Members, either in a report or in answer on the floor, when a question is asked. It is only upon that assumption that the gentleman could be justified in standing here and claiming the right to take charge of this measure—a right we all conceded, because back of the claim he advanced lies a long record of effective service in that direction.

Now, he undertakes to tell us that the very efficiency on which he had a right to pride himself, which we consider a glorious feature of this House, was really an impertinence which any member of the Executive Department, if he had chosen, might have rebuked. If that be the extent of our power over appropriations, it had better be wiped from our constitutional system and the people of this country no longer left to believe that when the House of Representatives appropriates money the estimate of the officer recommending the expenditure had passed the scrutiny of a competent body. Let us acknowledge the truth, and proclaim it that executive officers can open the door of the Treasury and help themselves to its contents whenever they choose to assert that an expenditure of money is necessary for the public service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that at some time or other somebody in the course of this debate would explain to us the necessity for each of these expenditures; would tell us how this Commission came to expend moneys beyond the amount appropriated; would tell us, when they asked for the enormous sum of eight or nine million dollars in addition, just when and how and where it would be expended; but so far not a member of the committee has been able to answer a single question on this head, but the debate has reached its culmination of vagueness with the declaration of the gentleman from Iowa that such questions would be impertinent. Sir, if that be true, I do not want to sit on the floor of this House. If a question asked in the discharge of my duty as a custodian of the public treasure is to be considered impertinent, then the requirement of the Constitution that money can be taken from the Treasury only after an appropriation by the House of Representatives is a hollow mockery.

I hope that the Administration responsible for this enterprise, responsible for this demand made upon the House, will take an attitude more favorable to our Constitution, more respectful to our system of government than that which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has thought proper to take here upon its behalf to-night. I hope that the House will be informed of the necessity for each of these expenditures; that we will be given some more definite information than this, for instance:

Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, $2,300,000."

I hope we will be vouchsafed some more information about this material than the statement that it is "miscellaneous" before we appropriate such a stupendous sum for the purchase of it. And so through every item the right of the House to scrutinize estimates will, I hope, be asserted and recognized before one dollar is appropriated. And here, sir, I ask the attention of the House again to this language, which we listened to with respect yesterday when read by the Clerk:

I earnestly recommend to the Congress the need of economy, and to this end of a rigid scrutiny of appropriations.

If in the past that duty has been neglected, it is time now that it should be discharged. I ask this House to decide now that requests for information on subjects as important as this are not an impertinence, but an obedience to the oath of office which all of us took no later than yesterday when, with uplifted hands we swore to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States—one of whose chief features provides that the Treasury of the Union shall be guarded by us, not in a perfunctory manner, but with vigilance, with unswerving determination to guard the safety of every dollar in its vaults until it is withdrawn by us to be expended in promoting the welfare of our whole citizenship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] shall place me in the position that he reiteratedly has tried to do. I made no such declaration as he has declared. I have not denied the right of scrutiny to any Member of this House with regard to appropriations. What I said was this, and I was talking of a practical matter. I said that when an estimate was made by a man learned in his profession, with regard to that which he understood and with regard to a duty that he was charged to perform, I would regard it as insolence on my part, not a professional, to attempt to criticise his estimate. That is what I said, and when I carried it further to the board of directors, and it was something in the line of duty of an engineer who made his estimates to them on a subject about which they had no professional knowledge, I said that it would be regarded as insolence for them to criticise the knowledge of the man who had been selected by them as the expert. And out of that, for the purpose of the gentleman, in order that he may deliver one of his general diatribes upon public virtue and upon the Constitution of the United States, he attempts to distort the purpose of my language into a denial of scrutiny on the part of the membership here of the business that comes before us. I said that had there been the utmost of detail with regard to these engineering matters they would have amounted to nothing to us, for the simple reason that we have no knowledge upon that subject, and that we would accept what was said notwithstanding the fact that we did not technically and professionally know whether or not those estimates were right. What would we know, I again say, as to the units of cost? We may have some knowledge here—possibly some professionals would—but we would have no knowledge of the correct unit in other places, where labor conditions were so different, where climatic influences were so remarkably changed from ours. Practically, it would have amounted to nothing if we had them; and therefore I said what I said, and not what the gentleman so glibly and repeatedly tried to put in my mouth. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, I thought the gentleman was through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized in his own right.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I merely wished to say that no one would be slower to do injustice to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] than myself. I value too highly as a national possession the very brilliant record which the gentleman has made in this House even to stand idly by if the slightest reflection were cast improperly upon his fame, but I think after the gentleman finished his statement that not a Member of the House here could find the slightest difference between his description of what he had said and mine. I repeat my statement of it now, and if the gentleman will show me where it is wrong in the slightest degree I shall correct it on the spot, with ample apologies to him and with great personal joy at finding I misapprehended him. I understand the gentleman to say now that if experts employed by the War Department certify to an expense, make an estimate of what some public work will cost, and send it to Congress, it would be superfluous and insolent on the part of this House to scrutinize this estimate on the ground——

Mr. HEPBURN. No, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. Pardon me——

Mr. HEPBURN. Wait a moment. The gentleman should make the distinction.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then let us have the distinction from the gentleman himself.

Mr. HEPBURN. I said that where an expert, a scientist, a man who had knowledge, is called upon under the solemnities of a great duty to perform an obligation, for me to set my information against his would be insolent, and I say that still and I believe it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, I will accept that. I will accept the gentleman's own statement of his statement. I shall not undertake to describe it myself again, because it would suffer in my imperfect rendering of it. [Laughter.]

I accept the statement exactly as the gentleman from Iowa has made it. It seems that the eminence of the expert is the test by which the insolence of the House is to be determined if it undertakes to examine the estimate he has made. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, I do not believe there is any degree of eminence that any expert ever reached in the history of mankind that would make it impertinent or insolent for the House of Representatives to scrutinize estimates prepared by him, or to scrutinize any act, condition, or case whatever upon which an appropriation of money, under our oaths, must be made.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have said what I would regard as insolence on my part; I have not stated it would be insolence for the House, if it concluded, to engage in any kind of investigation it wanted.

Mr. COCKRAN. In view of the explanation, Mr. Chairman, for which I am very grateful, I must say I should regard it as most calamitous, indeed, if the House had to separate itself from the gentleman from Iowa under any circumstance. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But, now, for the purpose of showing the gentleman from Iowa that, even where experts prepare estimates, there are abundant matters upon which Members of the House can exercise intelligent judgment before making appropriations, I ask his attention to paragraph No. 2 of the estimate or figures before us, and he will see there that 1,100 steel flat cars are certified to have cost $1,071,000. Now, it is a very fair and proper subject upon which any business man in this House can exercise his own judgment as to whether this is an extravagant price or not. And so with the item of 120 locomotives which appear to have been purchased.

Almost any person can tell about what the cost of a locomotive should be, given its weight, dimensions, and power. Here an expenditure of some three million dollars was made, and the items are given. We can all scrutinize them, and every Member of the House can see that the figures are about correct and fair. Why could not that same amount of information be given to us upon the other items? All this is information to which we are entitled. We, as the lawmaking body charged with the care of the Treasury, should exercise our own judgment as to whether any expenditure of money is a proper or an improper use of the public treasure, and I ask the gentleman from Iowa to remember that even though we may refuse appropriations or correct estimates it does not follow that we are impeaching the integrity of the expert who has made the estimates or of the Department recommending the appropriation. We can not put the judgment of the expert in place of our own. We can only use his information or figures to enlighten ourselves. Under our Constitution the Treasury door can not be opened by anybody except by this House, and by this House acting on its own conscience and judgment, that conscience and judgment enlightened, perhaps, by experts, but never controlled by them. But surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not extravagance to say that nobody on this floor has contributed more powerfully and more signally to establishing the ability of this House to discharge all of its functions than the gentleman from Iowa, and it is therefore in defense of the fame which he has won and of the record which he has made that I stand when I insist on the right of the House of Representatives to be governed by its own conscience and judgment in every appropriation of public funds and deny its right to accept the judgment of anybody, expert or other, in discharging a duty which the Constitution places on us and which it does not allow us to delegate to anyone, be he the wisest or best or most expert in all the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the debate has tended to what seems to me to be dangerous ground. This morning it was stated that this was an emergency measure. This House is always ready to act upon emergencies if it is necessary, but I am sorry from my standpoint of view to feel that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in his zeal for the passage of this measure leads us logically onto very dangerous ground. He holds up the Book of Estimates and says, "Here is our authority; let us follow the Book of Estimates."

Mr. HEPBURN. I beg your pardon, I did not say authority. I said that was the usual method in which estimates were made.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations for several years, I will say that estimates are nearly always made by experts—that is, by those who are believed to be peculiarly well qualified to estimate the necessities of the case under consideration. They are made by the friends of the enterprise sought to be promoted. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if this House is to follow the Book of Estimates, it will mean to bankrupt the Treasury of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the House assumes to abrogate its prerogative as guardian of the Treasury of the nation, and there is allowed to a coterie of men, experts though they may be, in any and every department, and back of any and every enterprise, the spending of the money of the United States, it means that we will go many millions of dollars into debt. We ought to save the people from that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion right there, to the effect that if this principle were once declared and acted upon consistently the Agrostologist, the Entomologist, and the Biologist of the Agricultural Department alone would take all of the money out of the Treasury each year. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I beg to ask the gentleman whether, with his experience on the Appropriations Committee, it has not been the usual and invariable rule of the committee, where contracts have been authorized by Congress, to appropriate the amount to carry on the work under contract which the engineering department or other department finally said was necessary for expenditure during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But there is a difficulty in this case, and it shows the predicament in which the House finds itself in having no committee to investigate this particular subject. As a general proposition, the gentleman's query would be answered in the affirmative, but it does not necessarily follow from that that the expenses may not be extravagant and therefore ought to be scrutinized.

I believe, gentlemen, we have entered upon an enterprise here that will bring scandal upon the whole country, not upon the Republican party or the Democratic party, but upon the United States, unless we put our hands upon the financial throttle and say to those responsible for the work as carried on "Thus far shalt thou go and no farther." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Between us and the people who pay the money there is no other authority, no other power, to say you shall not put your hands into the Treasury and take this or that. I repeat again, study the Book of Estimates and you will find that every man magnifies his office. Every man seeks to build up his department, not at the expense of others, but at the expense of the General Government. I will here say publicly what I have often said privately, that if the country knew the millions and millions of dollars that are saved to the people by the faithful guardianship of the Members of this House over the public Treasury they would have a greater appreciation of our services than many do at the present time.

I hope, sir, that this bill will pass as an emergency measure, but not as a precedent for future action, and that every step in the progress of this colossal enterprise may be made open and public, in order that the people may not only know what it cost to construct and complete it, but that the vast sums necessarily used have been wisely and economically expended.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, for fear that we might forget the laws which we have already provided in reference to the canal and the powers under which the Commission and the President are now acting, I beg leave to call the attention of the House to the act of Congress which we enacted providing for this canal and by which we directed the President to construct the Panama Canal and under which we authorized him—the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] to the contrary notwithstanding—to enter into contracts, and obligated ourselves to appropriate for the payment of those contracts from time to time the money necessary to build the canal, to the extent, at least, of $135,000,000 in addition to the $10,000,000 carried by the act.

Here we have a case where we have required the President to enter upon a work; where we have authorized him to incur the expenditures. The distinguished gentleman from New York was mistaken, in my opinion, when he stated that the Executive had incurred expenditures without authority of law. We passed the law; we gave the authority; we imposed the duty; they only obeyed our behest; and the only judgment which we can properly use in reference to the future expenditures is as to whether the amount that is asked for is necessary at this time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. I would like the gentleman to point out where "the gentleman from New York," if he referred to me, stated that these contracts had been made without authority of law.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York stated, or at least I understood him to state, that they had incurred large expenditures without authority of law. If the gentleman did not so state, I am certainly sorry to have misquoted him.

Mr. COCKRAN. I certainly did not so state, and could not so state, for I did not know anything about it.

Mr. MANN. When the gentleman revises the proof of his speech, I think he will find that he did. He may have done it by inadvertence.

Mr. COCKRAN. The question was entirely unconnected with the basis of my discussion. But I would like to ask the gentleman this: Do "estimated miscellaneous material purchases" refer to contracts already made?

Mr. MANN. Very likely.

Mr. COCKRAN. But do they? I want the gentleman to say whether they do or not.

Mr. MANN. A portion of them I know do, but whether they do or not we have authorized the President to enter into contracts, and whether he has already entered into contracts through the Commission or whether he has advertised for bids or whether he only proposes to advertise for bids makes no difference. We have conferred the authority and imposed the duty upon the Executive in regard to these expenditures. It is true we have the right—and it is not only a right, but it is a duty on our part—when these expenditures are incurred to inquire into them and see whether they have been honestly and economically incurred. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman's last admission puts us in a position of perfect harmony.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the House ought to be most careful about the expenditures upon this canal work. I do not believe that we can frame any law which will be too strict, because I realize the fact, the Executive realizes the fact, the head of the Department which has this work under control realizes the fact that with the utmost endeavor upon the part of those in authority it will sometimes be difficult to prevent extravagance and corrupt expenditure of money when the work is carried on 2,000 miles away from here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My recollection is the last Congress enacted a proviso rendering it unlawful for an executive officer to anticipate appropriations. Did that proviso become law or not—does the gentleman remember?

Mr. MANN. That proviso became law; but I will say it has no application in this case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that proviso became law, then is not any anticipation of actual appropriation unlawful, even in the case of a promised appropriation?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman distinctly not. If it were so you could not carry on any public building in the United States satisfactorily, and could do no river and harbor work. We authorize the Secretary of War to enter into contracts for river and harbor improvements. These contracts are entered into because in this way the work is done more economically than by making contracts from year to year. They have made them for expenditures beyond the amounts which have already been appropriated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the gentleman thinks that $135,000,000 have been appropriated?

Mr. MANN. I do not think that $135,000,000 have been appropriated. Ten million dollars have been appropriated, and only $10,000,000 have been expended; but contracts have been entered into for more, as we authorized the President. Does the gentleman from Mississippi say that we ought not to go ahead with any of this work on the canal, that we should stop everything now until——

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; "the gentleman" does not say that. On the contrary, the gentleman is perfectly willing to give whatever amount is absolutely necessary to prevent the work from stopping, up to the time that the committees can properly act.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I was talking about whether they had not violated the law in putting us in this predicament.

Mr. MANN. They clearly have not violated the law. That proviso which we enacted does not at all relate to this authority which we grant. It has no reference to contracts authorized by statute. Now, we have conferred this authority upon the President. We have imposed this duty upon him. If we were in the position where we wanted to make just as small an appropriation as possible, we ought carefully to scrutinize the items for the future; but we are in the position where we want as much money expended as can possibly be expended properly and with economy. We want the work to progress. I do not see that there is any occasion for charging that these people have not presented a proper estimate for this work.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. MANN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not desire to appear in the attitude of objecting to any reasonable amount that is required by the Commission to prosecute this work speedily and properly. In view of this statement will my colleague inform me, and through me the House, whether we can make a less appropriation than $16,500,000 and not in the slightest degree interfere with the progress of this work, leaving the difference between what we ought to appropriate now as an emergency and $16,500,000 for the committee to consider later and report later to this House?

Mr. MANN. I say to my colleague that I have no doubt it would be possible in some way to segregate the amounts and to differentiate between the amount necessary immediately and the amount necessary between now and the 30th of June. On the other hand, I wish to say to my colleague further that in the effort to make this differentiation, in the effort to segregate these amounts, between the amount absolutely needed at present and the amount which might be needed at any time I changed the conviction which I started out with, that an appropriation of three or four million dollars would be sufficient, and expressed my judgment at least in favor of appropriating the entire amount, believing, as I do, that we will probably have a deficiency appropriation to make anyway. The people on the canal work are forming their organization in such a way that they are progressing more rapidly than anybody expected, and I believe it would be a serious detriment unless the money is appropriated as needed; and in my judgment they will need it before another bill is likely to be passed through both Houses of Congress.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House very long, but I desire to call attention to the fact that this is the first opportunity the House has had for taking a part of the good advice given to it by the President in his recent message. Some people have criticised his message because, it is said, he sermonized to some extent, that he indulged in a lecture as to public duty, and that he referred frequently to doing things decently.

Now, here we have an opportunity to do the very thing that he preaches in his message which was read yesterday, an opportunity to scrutinize a coordinate department of this Government in the expenditure of the people's money, not only the expenditure that has already happened, but the proposed expenditure.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] begs the question when he tries to make this case analogous to the report of a chief of engineers for cement and for stone used in building locks on the Warrior or the Tombigbee River. That was a matter that had expert investigation. That was a matter that underwent the scrutiny of a committee of this House and underwent the scrutiny of this House, and it was well understood.

Now, there we have right here the difficulty—a want of information that perhaps precipitated this discussion. In the beginning of this discussion to-day the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asked a pertinent question—if it be true that $10,000 a year of the people's money appropriated to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama was used for the purpose of paying a press agent, and, if it was so used, what was the necessity for employing a press agent. This question was not answered. It has not been answered yet. If this had been a specific statement, a detailed statement, that information would now, perhaps, be in the possession of the gentleman from New York. Isn't it a matter fairly for comment and for criticism that $10,000 of the people's money appropriated for digging the canal should be used in paying a press agent? What do we want with a press agent, if there is one? Can he tell this House anything about Panama more than it already knows? He is a resident here in Washington. What are his duties? Where does value received come from such extraordinary services as that of a press agent?

Now, I want to call the attention of the House to another peculiarity of this statement. You will find at the top of column 2 on page 40 of the record, "Estimated expenditures for October and November, 1905." Estimated expenses! October and November are buried in the past. Now, that time has passed and yet this matter is brought here and defended under the head of "Estimated expenses."

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, the distinction in the two items is between the auditor's office—one here and one on the Isthmus. The auditor in Washington has accounts all the way from California to New York. These accounts have not all been returned, and it is impossible to tell exactly the amount of these expenses, either in Washington or at the Isthmus.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not even for October? Salaries and wages for October already spent, and you don't know what it is? It is high time then, Mr. Chairman, that the people should know how their money is being expended.

Mr. MANN. It is impossible to tell, either for October or November, exactly the amount expended in the United States for any of these items running all the way from California to New York. Now, in order to prevent any claim that there was an error in them, it is made as an estimate. It is supposed to be the exact amount of the expenses, I will say to the gentleman, but this statement was made to me by the auditor in submitting the estimates.

Mr. CLAYTON. You will find another peculiarity in this item. It says, "Salaries and wages at Washington for October, $30,000; for November, $30,000," making in all $60,000. Now, farther down in the same column you will find an item in subdivision 8 which says: "Salaries, incidental expenses, etc., in the United States, from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, covering Washington office, including commissioners' offices, of assisting purchasing agents at New York, New Orleans, and Tacoma, cable and telegraph service estimated at $25,000 per month," $5,000 less than what seems to be embraced in the item of expenditure for October and November mentioned above.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that if this very item of $10,000—and it is not a small item for a press agent. It is asked what services he rendered. "Oh, miscellaneous, miscellaneous." Everything is hid away under the word "miscellaneous" and "estimated." Follow these items through and you will find the word miscellaneous is used very often. Now, I want to know what is embraced in "miscellaneous?" I suppose the House has a right to know something about it; it is our duty to know about it when we come to appropriate the people's money. Let us carry out the injunction of the President and begin now and exercise some scrutiny over the expenditures of the public money. That is our business, and let us do it, and now is a good time to carry into practice the sermon which the President preached to us yesterday.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I have always believed that we should have the most thorough exposition of every item of expense in connection with the building of the isthmian canal, and I beg to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the act authorizing the acquisition of the Panama Canal Company's assets, approved June 28, 1902, to which the pending bill is an amendment, provides that "the Commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, and shall make to the President annually and at such other periods as may be required, either by law or by order of the President, full and complete reports of all their actings and doings, and of all moneys received and expended in the construction of said work, and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which said report shall, by the President, be transmitted to Congress."

I understand, as stated by my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], that those reports have been transmitted to Congress, and that as soon as they are received from the Public Printer the House will have all the information with reference to past expenditures which has been desired; and if it has not been furnished, I am ready to join in the earliest effort to call for it, because there is no doubt of the fact that the accounts have been fully kept in every detail, and that it is a mere matter of copying and printing to give them to the House and the country. And in connection with the importance of this matter, specially called to our notice by the impressive warning of my friend from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER], I submit to the consideration of Members of this body whether it would not be well, whatever the cost, to have each month printed for general distribution every item of expenditure, no matter how insignificant. It is possibly the only way to avoid at some time in the future that terrible calamity of dishonor and disgrace which would come from a diversion of the moneys appropriated for this great work to private advantage and profit. I know not why the general auditor submitted such an estimate of possible expenditures for the future. I am very sure, from the character of the present chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission, that had he been on his feet in his office there would have been a much more extended and explicit estimate of expenditures for the ensuing months. Consider his situation. Called to this position but a few months since, with other great duties to discharge and which he could scarcely leave, and which required some attention from him part of the time since his employment, he went immediately to the Isthmus, and found that while thousands of workmen had been gathered together there no adequate provision for their housing, their feeding, for the care of the sick—and an epidemic of yellow fever and other diseases was then raging on the Isthmus—had been made.

It was a crisis which required the rushing in of material, the construction of piers, equipment, and double tracking of the railroad, which required large expenditures of money; first, for housing and for treatment in hospital, and, second, for getting and distributing machinery with which to employ the thousands of workmen that were then there; for had he simply looked to housing and feeding and made no provision for a speedy unloading of ships and the handling of materials and machinery upon the Itshmus with speed and economy and of beginning the great work of excavating the canal, this force of workmen would have disappeared or at least have become disorganized and disorderly, and there would have been serious obstacles in the way of resuming the work. Therefore, I thank God that Theodore P. Shonts pushed this work onward and did endeavor to expend the largest possible amount of public money in facilitating the progress of the work. I believe he did it honorably, wisely, and purely. I believe that full accounts have been kept of every item. If errors have been made, they have been errors of judgment, which can be criticised and corrected hereafter. At this time it seems to me the only duty upon the membership of the House in this connection is to endeavor to maintain the credit of this Commission, and the most effective condition of the forces upon the Isthmus, and to maintain the credit of the Commission in the markets of the world, so that they can secure the best materials for the cheapest prices hereafter, and thus encourage and expedite the herculean work of constructing the canal, a duty we can best perform by passing the bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], now under consideration.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to encourage the purchasing of materials in the open markets of the world, I would ask him what he has to say in respect to estimate 3, which says:

Estimated miscellaneous material purchases in the United States from December 1, 1905, to June 30, 1906, $2,300,000.

Why limit it if we desire to go to the open markets of the world?

Mr. WANGER. I understand that that language relates to purchases by purchasing agents in the United States.

Mr. JAMES. But it does not say that.

Mr. WANGER. They can receive bids from anybody anywhere around the globe.

Mr. JAMES. It does not say that and does not use that language as to other articles, but limits this expenditure of $2,300,000 to the United States.

Mr. WANGER. They have purchasing offices in two places only—one upon the Isthmus and the other in the United States—and with the advertising for proposals by the Commission all manufacturers of machinery and materials that are required by them in the work become acquainted with their wants, and if foreign manufacturers can meet the prices of the producers in this country there is no obstacle to their successful competition. The invitations for proposals——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WANGER. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you tell me to what extent, if at all, we have bought any of these goods in competition with foreign markets?

Mr. WANGER. I have no information upon that subject. They advertised for proposals very generally.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where?

Mr. WANGER. Wherever they supposed there were persons to offer them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did they advertise in foreign countries?

Mr. WANGER. I have no information upon that subject, but I beg to suggest that the manufacturers abroad have agents in the United States ready to inform their principals whenever a market opens for their products.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, I would like to finish that line of inquiry, as I desire to get all the information I can, as we are all interested in it. My information is for a while Governor Taft, the Secretary of War, bought a great deal of machinery and many supplies in the open markets of the world. A great howl was raised about it in some quarters, and possibly he abandoned it. I do not know whether he did——

Mr. WANGER. I do not know at all, but I know the question of whether or not the supplies, especially for the Panama Railroad Company, were properly advertised for was a special subject of investigation by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the last Congress, pursuant to which arrangements were made to secure more free competition in the purchase of supplies and give the fullest opportunity for competition by all producers and persons having the required articles for sale.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. WANGER. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. JAMES. You see, section 3 relates to purchases in the United States. I ask you whether or not the eleven hundred steel flat cars were to be purchased or were purchased only in the United States.

Mr. WANGER. I understand they were.

Mr. JAMES. Why did they not use the language "purchased in the United States" there?

Mr. WANGER. I think they discriminate between the mainland of the United States and the Isthmus.

Mr. JAMES. I know, but the point is that the purchase of this material to the extent of $2,300,000 is to be made in the United States. Now, here are purchases of steel flat cars, locomotives, steam shovels, water tanks and towers, and things of that character, and I desire to know why they did not use the same language in regard to that which they use in regard to this other item?

Mr. WANGER. I direct my friend's attention to the fact I had nothing at all to do with the preparation of these estimates.

Mr. JAMES. I know you did not, but I want to find out why it was done. It is not part of the bill, but if you pass the bill relying upon that estimate, then it will be assumed as a direction for the expenditure of the $2,300,000 in the limited market of the United States and not the open market of the world.

Mr. MANN. It is simply a differentiation in the——

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman from Kentucky had investigated more closely the language he would have found in one place reference is had to past transactions, purchases already made, and in the other instance to estimates of purchases yet to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate the Clerk will report the bill by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bonds authorized by section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902, shall be subject to the provisions of section 13 of the act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, the same as though said bonds were issued under the provisions of said act of March 14, 1900.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. VREELAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration of the bill H. R. 480, and had directed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

Whereas the Chinese-exclusion act is now bearing its evil fruits in the boycott of American goods, and is likely to effect seriously our southern products, as well as the Christian mission work in China, unless repealed or modified: Therefore,

Resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Georgia (the senate concurring), That the President of the United States and the Congress thereof are respectfully urged to repeal or so modify what is known as "the Chinese-exclusion act" as will not only restore friendly relations, but extend our commerce with that country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, praying for the enactment of legislation imposing a duty on all coffee imported from foreign countries into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives and the senate of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii:

Whereas the coffee industry of this Territory is now in a depressed condition and many of the plantations are threatened to be abandoned on account of the continued low price of the product and the large quantities of coffee imported into the United States from Mexico and Central America free of duty; and

Whereas there are within this Territory large areas of land suitable to the cultivation of coffee and there are large areas of coffee lands in the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, new possessions of the United States; and

Whereas large amounts of American capital are now invested in this industry in the Territory of Hawaii and in the new possessions of the United States, providing employment to many citizens unable to compete with the peon labor of South and Central America; and

Whereas it is meet and proper that this industry and the citizens engaged in it should be encouraged and protected for the benefit of the Territory of Hawaii and the whole of the United States and its possessions; and

Whereas a distinguished commission of the honorable Senate of the United States, which lately visited the Territory of Hawaii and reported the same to the Senate of the United States, recommended that a bounty of 4 cents per pound be paid the producers of coffee within this Territory for each pound of coffee produced: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to impose a duty on all coffee imported from foreign countries into the United States, or in lieu thereof to provide a suitable bounty to be paid to the producers of coffee within the United States, to the end that a great internal agricultural industry may be created and the nation further become self-supporting.

Resolved, That the governor of the Territory is hereby requested to transmit certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate of the Territory of Hawaii, with the request that the resolution be properly placed before the Congress of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Honolulu, Hawaii, March 10, 1905.

We hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full, and correct copy of a concurrent resolution this day adopted in the house of representatives of the Territory of Hawaii.

ERIC A. KNUDSEN,

We hereby certify the foregoing to be a true, full, and correct copy of a concurrent resolution this day adopted in the senate of the Territory of Hawaii.

D. PAUL R. ISENBERG,
President of the Senate.
WILLIAM SAVIDGE,
Clerk of the Senate.

I, G. R. Carter, governor of the Territory of Hawaii, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a concurrent resolution passed by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, and that the signatures thereto attached are those of the duly authorized officers of the said legislature.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the Territory of Hawaii to be affixed this 29th day of March, A. D. 1905.

[SEAL.]

G. R. CARTER,
Governor of Hawaii.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, praying for the enactment of legislation excepting religious, benevolent, charitable, and scientific corporations from the restriction contained in section 55 of the act approved April 30, 1900, providing a government for the Territory of Hawaii; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas for more than seventy-five years past the sisters and priests of the Roman Catholic Church have maintained and directed a mission in the Hawaiian Islands under the name of the Catholic Mission of the Hawaiian Islands; and

Whereas this mission represents several thousands of communicants and owns real estate in different parts of the Territory which is used for church and school purposes, and where not so used is held for such use when the population of the Territory shall warrant the same; and

Whereas the said Catholic mission is not an incorporated body, but is managed by said bishop and priests under the rules, regulations, and discipline of the Roman Catholic Church; and

Whereas said bishop and priests desire to become incorporated, but as the said mission owns throughout the entire group of islands over 1,000 acres of land an act of Congress is necessary to protect them in their vested rights if they should form a corporation; and

Whereas religious, benevolent, charitable, or scientific corporations should not be restricted like business corporations in their real-estate holdings to 1,000 acres of land: Therefore,

Resolved by the senate of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, memorialized to pass an act excepting religious, benevolent, charitable, and scientific corporations from the restriction contained in section 55 of "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, limiting the real-estate holdings of corporations to 1,000 acres of land, and allowing religious, benevolent, charitable, and scientific corporations to hold any number of acres of land, providing such land is used strictly and exclusively for religious, benevolent, charitable, or scientific purposes, as the case may be.

That the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house of representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to jointly certify and send a copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate, a copy to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and a copy to Hon. J. K. Kalanianaole, Delegate to Congress, for submission to that honorable body.

We hereby certify that the foregoing concurrent resolution was adopted by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii on the 26th day of April, A. D. 1905.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution of the legislature of Minnesota, indorsing the action of the President in waging war against unlawful combinations in restraint of trade; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolutions.

Resolved by the senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby extend to the struggling people of Kansas our earnest sympathy and support in the contest inaugurated with the Standard Oil Company for economic freedom in the markets of their State and to secure an open field in which to exploit and develop the bounteous riches lavished upon them by the hand of nature; and we recommend to all our sister States cordial cooperation with the heroic people of Kansas in their efforts to destroy every form of monopolistic and corporate tyranny, to the end that trade and commerce production and consumption may again shed their beneficence over all the people unhampered and untrammeled by unlawful conspiracies, conceived and born only to gratify greed, to depress the prices of the producer, while enhancing the cost of everything to the consumer.

Resolved, That we expect and rightfully demand that our Senators, and Representatives in the Congress of the United States do all in their power to advance and carry to a triumphant issue the plans and policies of our President, Theodore Roosevelt, in the warfare he now is waging against unlawful combinations and conspiracies, whose sole purpose is to stifle competition, restrain trade, and plunder alike producer and consumer. The people have come to recognize that our capitalistic monopolies are laying the whole country under tribute, and that the only road to salvation, safety, and prosperity lies in the direction of laws wisely framed for the destruction of these monster evils and in the determined, inflexible enforcement of such laws.

Resolved, That in his manly, courageous, and prescient attempt to regulate trusts, corporations, monopolies, and all unlawful combinations and to punish all violators of the law pertaining to such evils, regardless of persons, the President of the United States is deserving of, and will receive, the support of both branches of the legislature of this State and the commendation and unanimous and unswerving support of all the people of this Commonwealth regardless of partisanship or party.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the legislature of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation opening certain lands to settlement on the Indian reservations in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas by an act of Congress, introduced by our Senator NELSON, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians," a treaty was made with said Indians whereby they were to select lands for homes, and the remainder of their reservations were to be opened for actual settlers, at $1.25 per acre and five years' residence, the timber being first sold, which has been done; and

Whereas by subsequent legislation 225,000 acres of said cut-over lands were reserved for experiment in forestry, without compensation to the Indians; and

Whereas such lands surround the allotments taken by the Indians and render them valueless, thus defeating the purposes of the Nelson Act, which was to help them, educate them, and make them self-supporting. Land without roads, schools, churches, and towns, and no way to get them, is worthless; and

Whereas the State owns about 145,000 acres of land located within said tract, which is depreciated in value for the same reasons; and

Whereas the reservation of so much land fit for settlement is an injury not only to that part of the State, but to the commercial interests of the whole State, the land reserved being already crossed by two railroads: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is requested to enact a law to open said lands to settlement by actual settlers, conformably to the Nelson Act.

Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives are requested to urge this matter upon Congress.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is instructed to send copies of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives and to the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior.

Which was adopted.

LAWS OF TEXAS RESPECTING RAILROADS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, during the sitting of the Committee on Interstate Commerce in April and May of this year, Mr. Victor Morawetz, a citizen of New York, volunteered an attack upon the laws of the State of Texas respecting railroads and the action of the railroad commission of that State. Subsequently the attention of Mr. Allison Mayfield, a member of the railroad commission of Texas, was called to this testimony, and he has written, in the form of a letter to me, an answer to this voluntary criticism.

In view of the fact that his letter reached me too late to be presented to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and included in the report of testimony and statements taken by that committee, I ask that this answer be printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document, so that it may be convenient for all Senators to examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas presents a communication and asks that it may be printed in the RECORD and that it also be printed as a document. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that he omit printing the communication in the RECORD. Let it be printed as a document. It can be easily attached to the testimony. I fear that we shall get too much matter in the RECORD in that way.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed as a Senate document and referred——

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Texas also that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of the bill (S. 529) to promote the national defense, to create a force of naval volunteers, to establish American ocean mail lines to foreign markets, to promote commerce, and to provide revenue from tonnage, and report No. 1, thereon, be printed for the use of the Senate.

EXAMINATIONS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday which was submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. TILLMAN, as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller of the Currency be directed to inform the Senate (1) whether all the reports of the examinations of the national banks made by the bank examiners since March 4, 1893, have been preserved in his office; (2) how often the regular examinations have been made; (3) whether it is the duty of every bank examiner to examine the records and vouchers showing the expenditures for all purposes of each bank visited by him; (4) whether it is his duty, if he finds that moneys have been illegally or wastefully expended by the bank, to state the facts in his report; (5) whether the reports now on file made since said date show any payments by any bank to any political committee or to any chairman, treasurer, or other officer of a political committee; and (6) whether such reports show any payments of the moneys of a bank to any person upon any voucher, or without any voucher, where the circumstances of the payments suggest that the money paid was to be used to carry on a political campaign or for any political purpose; and if any reports now on file show any such payments to any political committee, or to a chairman, treasurer, or other officer of a political committee, or any payments suggesting a use of money for a political campaign or any political purpose, said Comptroller of the Currency is directed to report all the facts in all such cases to the Senate, and to inform the Senate what action, if any, has been taken as the result of the discovery of any such payments as aforesaid.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to modify the resolution by substituting the words "Secretary of the Treasury" for "Comptroller of the Currency," wherever they occur.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be modified as requested by the Senator from South Carolina. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

Mr. TILLMAN. When I introduced the resolution yesterday, Mr. President, accompanied by one of similar import which calls for an investigation by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I had no purpose to discuss it; but as there seemed to be objection, and there may still be objection, I desire briefly to outline the motives and purposes which I had in view.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator proceeds, if he will permit me, as he speaks of objection to the resolution, I desire to say that I simply asked that it should lie over and be printed——

Mr. TILLMAN. I had no objection in the world to that——

Mr. GALLINGER. For the reason that I wished to examine it. I have read it with great care this morning and am fully satisfied it is a very proper resolution to pass. I see no objection whatever to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I am glad the Senator approves of investigations of some sort.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have always been in favor of proper investigations.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will be zealous in his new rôle of reformer as we go along, as we seem to have so many things that need reform and investigation around here. Now, I desire briefly to give some reasons why I think this special branch of the Government, or rather these banks created by Federal charters and acting under Federal law, are proper subjects for ventilation.

I want to say, first, as an excuse or justification, if either be necessary, that I have the very highest authority for desiring the Senate to enter upon this subject and subjects of similar character. Our President a year ago in his annual message had this to say along this line:

The power of the Government to protect the integrity of the elections of its own officials is inherent and has been recognized and affirmed by repeated declarations of the Supreme Court. There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. No one defends or excuses corruption, and it would seem to follow that none would oppose vigorous measures to eradicate it. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in Federal elections. The details of such a law may be safely left to the wise discretion of the Congress, but it should go as far as under the Constitution it is possible to go, and should include severe penalties against him who gives or receives a bribe intended to influence his act or opinion as an elector; and provisions for the publication not only of the expenditures for nominations and elections of all candidates, but also of all contributions received and expenditures made by political committees.

In his annual message this year the President says:

It is entirely proper both to give and receive them—

That is, contributions—

unless there is an improper motive connected with either gift or reception. If they are extorted by any kind of pressure or promise, express or implied, direct or indirect, in the way of favor or immunity, then the giving or receiving becomes not only improper, but criminal.

Farther down I find this statement in this year's message:

All contributions by corporations to any political committee or for any political purpose should be forbidden by law; directors should not be permitted to use stockholders' money for such purposes; and, moreover, a prohibition of this kind would be, as far as it went, an effective method of stopping the evils aimed at in corrupt practices acts. Not only should both the National and the several State legislatures forbid any officer of a corporation from using the money of the corporation in or about any election, but they should also forbid such use of money in connection with any legislation save by the employment of counsel in public manner for distinctly legal services.

Now that our Chief Executive has taken a very pronounced and aggressive stand to secure purity in elections, every good American will say, "Well done," and will look for progress along that line.

In this connection I will quote other and very high Republican authority as indorsing and urging this policy. I am reading now from an article in the North American Review, by Mr. Perry Belmont, of New York, who has had some intimate association, through his kinsman, with Democratic campaigns, and who ought to know something about how these things are worked. You will see as I go along that I will be entirely impartial in endeavoring to cast light in dark places that may exist now or may have existed in the past, or, rather, I am trying to get the committee to turn the light on, which they alone can do. I will merely give the reasons why I think it imperative that something should be done and done at once. Mr. Belmont states that—

Close upon the heels of the Presidential campaign of 1892, in which it is known, millions were expended on both sides, Mr. Root, speaking in the New York constitutional convention of 1894 in reference to the proposed incorporation into the State constitution of an amendment relative to corrupt practices, said (Revised RECORD, Vol. III, p. 877)—

I will only quote a brief paragraph—

"* * * The use of money has come to such a pass at the hands of both of the great political parties in this country that we find enormous contributions necessary to maintain party machinery—to conduct party warfare—and the effect is that great moneyed interests, corporate and personal, are exerting yearly more and more undue influence in political affairs, * * * and political parties are every year contracting greater debts to the men who can furnish the money to perform the necessary functions of party warfare."

Later on, in this connection, Mr. Root said:

I think some qualification would have to be inserted, otherwise the general language would apply to such corporations as those which publish newspapers. * * * The idea is to prevent * * * the great railroad companies, the great insurance companies, the great telephone companies, the great aggregations of wealth, from using their corporate funds, directly or indirectly, to send members of the legislature to these halls in order to vote for their protection and the advancement of their interests as against those of the public. It strikes at a constantly growing evil, which has done more to shake the confidence of the plain people of small means of this country in our political institutions than any other practice which has ever obtained since the foundation of our Government. And I believe that the time has come when something ought to be done to put a check to the giving of $50,000 or $100,000 by a great corporation toward political purposes, upon the understanding that a debt is created from a political party to it.

I quote this from Mr. Root, the present Secretary of State, a man as to whose patriotism and ability I do not suppose there is any possibility of doubt among any class of his fellow-countrymen anywhere.

Now, Mr. President, this particular resolution seeks to get some light from the only source that is at present available. I do not know whether the report of the Secretary of the Treasury when it comes to us—supposing that this resolution shall be passed—will be only "darkness visible" or not; in other words, whether we shall have an illustration of "how not to do it." Possibly he has not got any facts, but I think I will show from the statutes that he ought to have some or that he can get some.

I have had an intimation that the Comptroller of the Currency is now investigating along this very line, with the possible purpose of instituting legal proceedings in case he finds that there has been disobedience to the law, or rather that the law has been trampled under foot.

I desire to read here section 5209 of the Revised Statutes. It is the national banking act of 1863 as incorporated into the Revised Statutes with amendments:

SEC. 5209. Every president, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or agent of any association—

That is, a national banking association—who embezzles, abstracts—

or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, or credits of the association; or who, without authority from the directors, issues or puts in circulation any of the notes of the association; or who, without such authority, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree; or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of the association, with intent, in either case, to injure or defraud the association or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of the association, or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of any such association; and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, clerk, or agent in any violation of any of this section, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned not less than five years nor more than ten.

That is a very broad and sweeping provision of law. It would seem to be a kind of dragnet to catch any scoundrel, I would say, though the term may be harsh, who might use the funds of a bank for purposes which are so vehemently denounced by the President and the present Secretary of State.

I recall in this connection that in one suit brought to punish the cashier of a bank who had used its funds for deposit and collateral with a broker for purposes of speculation, and who contended that he could produce evidence to show that he did it with the knowledge and consent of the bank president, and that the profits, if any, were for the benefit of the association, when he was indicted, in the court he was told that such testimony was not admissible. I did not track it up to see whether he was punished or not, but I presume he was, because the facts were undisputed. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court, who held that the testimony was not admissible, and therefore that that man should be punished according to law.

So we have here warrant of law for the idea that any use or misuse of the money of a national bank by any of its officers or directors, unless it be by vote of the board of directors, would be punishable by fine and imprisonment, and maybe even then.

The Comptroller of the Currency has the specific and direct control, through the bank examiners, of all the expenditures of these corporations; he has access to the books, and can call for a report whenever he pleases. So if a probe is pushed in, probably—I do not say certainly—we will discover some things that ought to be known, and I hope we shall take steps to guard against their recurrence. My reason for guessing or surmising that the national banks are not innocent in this particular, but have contributed of the funds of their stockholders for political purposes, rests upon the supposition of mine, or rather the supposition rests upon the fact, recently brought out in the insurance investigation in New York, that the insurance companies have not felt at all reluctant or unwilling to use the funds in their control for this specific purpose, and they have not felt unwilling, in fact have been for ten years or more annually contributing of such funds to the political campaigns of the Republican party in the State of New York with the direct assurance or confession in the testimony of a member of this body that these contributions were given with the implied understanding that such insurance companies were to be protected from adverse legislation or administration, or something of that sort, at Albany.

Now, if the insurance companies have been guilty of this practice, a crime in the eyes of the President, and certainly of the policy holders—and I myself have a little policy in the Mutual, and do not like for my dividends to be cut down by giving a salary of $150,000 to Mr. McCurdy, and about $175,000 of that money to his sons and other kinsfolk, and all the other members of the family.

I am a little inclined to hope that something can be done toward ventilating and giving publicity to the enormities and outrages that are being perpetrated by the political machines probably of both political parties toward the debauchery of the American electorate. That is what I am after. If the Democrats have been guilty of these things—and I have no doubt they have got all the money they could for campaign purposes, and have used it unscrupulously, perhaps—I have no objection in the world to ventilating that and having those who are guilty held up to public obloquy and disgrace, as they ought to be, if we can get the facts. The question is, Will the Senate go after the facts in an honest and determined manner, or will we practice such things as I have seen here since I have been a member of this body, of going about anything like that in a lame and half-hearted way, with every possible excuse not to search to the bottom and not probe the abscess, as I may term it. That is the whole sum and substance of it.

I note here in the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor the following among other powers and duties of the Secretary of that Department.

The said Commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations excepting common carriers subject to "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

Now, here is a well-organized branch of the Government. The machinery is in full movement, I suppose, or it ought to be, through which these facts can be obtained, if they have not already been obtained, and if the President is sincere and honest and means business, to use a slang phrase, he already has at hand the instrumentalities by which the facts can be brought to light. To indulge in rhetorical platitudes and high-sounding phrases, fine words, and all that kind of thing, which "butter no parsnips," as I have heard, and to do nothing, to fail, so far as the instrumentalities of the law permit, to exercise his executive authority to investigate and to punish wherever practicable any malpractices of this sort will not, as I say, add very much to the stature of the Executive as a statesman and as a patriot.

I am waiting prayerfully and hopefully for something along the line that I have indicated; but, as I said, the main object of life with public men nowadays seems to be how not to do certain things, while being very easy, and, I might say, servile and subservient to do other things, and they always find a way to do those things they want to do, and always seem to find a way not to do things the corporations do not want done.

I call attention to the law under which the President has the lantern with which he himself can enter these dark recesses and counting rooms and railroad offices, and all that kind of thing, and give us light, if he will. A committee of Congress would have power to send for persons and papers; but even then, judging by past experience, it is doubtful, when we might imprison somebody for contempt, whether or not anything would come of it. So it seems that we have got to a point in an effort to solve this difficult problem where most men are doubtful or unwilling to go forward.

I note here, in addition to what I have already read from the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, the following:

It shall also be the province and duty of said Bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law.

I am no lawyer, as you all know, but I have doubts as to whether an insurance company that might be called on to permit investigation might not fall back on its undoubted rights under the Constitution as a State corporation and disclaim or prohibit——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. Let me get through with my sentence first.

I was going to say that I doubted very seriously whether we had any right to include insurance companies in the category of corporations that are to be examined by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina now yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say to the Senator, though that is not a matter of much importance, that I agree with him fully upon that. I think the clause the Senator has quoted, by which the fundamental act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor included in its investigations corporations doing insurance business, was not in the bill originally; that in a way which I have not yet ascertained it came in afterwards; and that nobody realized—I know I did not so realize—that he was either voting for a bill or allowing a bill to pass without protest that gave to any Department of the Federal Government the authority to take in charge the business of insurance companies as a part of interstate commerce.

I do not feel that the Senate or any Senator is bound by the fact that in the hurry of legislation upon a subject not thoroughly investigated that clause crept in, giving authority to investigate insurance affairs.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is there all the same. It is a law passed by both branches of Congress and approved by the President, and is law until repealed.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly it is there, but fortunately the whole subject remains for Congress to deal with.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course the courts can destroy it by decisions if the test is made, in which the issue would be that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has no right, no legal, constitutional authority to investigate the affairs of an insurance company chartered by a State.

Mr. HALE. The courts, as the Senator knows, have already taken ground upon the general subject, and the Senate has already directed the Committee on the Judiciary, the law committee of this body, to investigate fundamentally that great question—the constitutionality. So the Senate is already committed to the investigation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, this is a mere side issue with me. I am thankful to say that through a committee of the legislature of the State of New York we are getting light as to the corruption and the debauchery, I will say, that have seized upon the insurance companies and have made the insurance companies seize upon the politicians, and I trust that we will have some reform legislation in New York and in other States in regard to insurance companies which will give us more protection.

Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina stated a moment ago that he is a policy holder, and I know he has kept well informed as to the progress of the investigation. I therefore desire to ask him if he can inform the Senate whether the money contributed by the insurance companies to the Republican campaign committee has been returned?

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood that the President was going to urge Mr. Cortelyou to get the money and send it back; that it had come into his hands unlawfully or dishonestly somehow or other, and that he felt honor bound to see that it was restored. But I have not yet received my share of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I did read in the prints that the President was exasperated when he learned——

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether his is a life policy?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not time for him to get his share.

Mr. TILLMAN. Hold on. I had some dividends coming to me on my policy. I paid very high premiums in order to get the dividends, and they have been very small and pitiful—so small and pitiful that I have called them contemptible; and with Mr. McCurdy getting $150,000 a year for getting fat and doing nothing, I should like some one somewhere to come in and stop him. By the way, I see he has resigned, but his salary does not come back any more than do some of the great lawyers' fees which have been paid come back.

Mr. BAILEY. My opinion was that the President having expressed, so we are informed by the public prints, his determination to have this money restored to the trust funds from which it was improperly taken, had probably seen to its return before he delivered another message to the Congress of the United States upon the subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, all the Turveydrops and Pecksniffs are not dead, I am afraid, though of course I would not for a moment hint that the strenuous gentleman who presides over the destinies of this Republic should be mentioned in the same breath. But I am waiting prayerfully and watching for action and results rather than so many words.

In connection with this I think probably it is a good place to bring it out or to bring it in—the testimony of the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] before the investigating committee in New York some time in November. I have already alluded to the fact that one of the members of this body, being called upon to testify in this connection, made certain statements, and I have given an outline of those statements, but I wish to incorporate more fully or "embalm" this testimony in the RECORD, as the phrase is. You know we have got into such a habit of loading down the RECORD with dead speeches or dull, dry utterances, and an immense amount of nonsense and rot, I may almost say, that nobody, except people who have more time than sense, read it. Therefore, when we want to put anything where it will never be looked at any more—after a few years, anyhow—we put it in the RECORD and embalm it, and it stays there for the future bookworm or the worm that will eat the books up. I do not mean the two-legged worms, but those that really eat books. I do not mean the fellow who delves around in the library and gets out facts.

I quote from the New York Sun of November 22, 1905:

Mr. PLATT stated, in answer to the very first question, that he had received contributions from the life insurance companies for political purposes. He gave it as his opinion that the contributions covered a period of ten years or so. These contributions were solely for State campaign purposes; he had had nothing whatever to do with the national campaign funds.

The Equitable Life had contributed $10,000 yearly. Mr. PLATT denied, though, that he had ever received any money from the Equitable as a contribution for any local or municipal campaign. He denied also that any contributions had been made to the expenses of candidates for the legislature.

"Then the amounts that you have received for the purposes of State campaigns," said Mr. Hughes, "cover all the amounts you have received from the Equitable Life?"

"Yes," replied Mr. PLATT, "the contributions were general in their character. There was not any specific sum mentioned for any campaign—for what it was to be used for."

EQUITABLE'S $10,000 IN CASH.

Q. But you divided up, or some committee divided up, this money that was received in such a way as you thought expedient?—A. It was. They usually made the contributions to me, and I think they always did by a special messenger. He came to my office and delivered me a package of money, and I didn't know—I could only tell what it was, and I immediately turned it over to the State committee, either to the chairman or the secretary or the treasurer.

Mr. PLATT said that he didn't even keep the contributions over night when they came to him, but turned them over at once to the State committee. He could not remember ever having received one of these contributions directly from an officer of the Equitable.

Q. Did you make any request for these contributions?—A. I did not.

Q. They came voluntarily?—A. They came voluntarily.

Q. At the inception of the making of these contributions, or the practice of making them, did you make any request for them?—A. Well, I don't remember about that.

Mr. Hughes wanted to know whether $10,000 was a fixed sum to be paid by the Equitable yearly.

"Well," replied the Senator, "it was a fixed sum; that is, they did not exceed that amount, and they didn't reduce it either."

Senator PLATT said that his memory was somewhat hazy in regard to the contributions which he had received from the Mutual Life. They did not give any sum annually, like the Equitable, but contributed only on stated occasions.

M'CURDY ACTED FOR THE MUTUAL.

Q. With what officer of the Mutual Life did you deal in receiving these contributions?—A. I think it was Mr. McCurdy. I would not be sure.

Q. R. A. McCurdy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get the money from him directly?—A. No, sir; it was given to me just as I said.

Q. In the same way that it was given to you by the Equitable—sent by a messenger, in currency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did it happen that the Mutual Life contributed the money? Was it in pursuance of an understanding between yourself and Mr. McCurdy?—A. I simply asked him at various times when necessities were very great for money, and he said he would be very glad to subscribe.

Q. This was for the State campaign?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. McCurdy understood it?—A. He understood it, and could not understand it any other way, because I was not representing the national campaign.

Mr. PLATT said that whenever he got anything from the Mutual it was usually about $10,000. In reply to a question as to whether he had ever received anything from the New York Life, the Senator replied: "I think very seldom."

Mr. PLATT said that he had talked with John A. McCall, of the New York Life, in regard to contributions; but when asked for a more definite statement in regard to the New York Life, he replied: "I am not positive. My memory is at fault with reference to that."

Mr. Hughes said that he had heard that Senator PLATT had something to do with the raising of funds for the Harrison campaign, but Mr. PLATT said he couldn't recall that.

"You are clear in your mind," asked Mr. Hughes, "that you never had any contributions made to you for the purposes of a national campaign?"

"Yes, sir," the Senator replied emphatically. "They never were given to me for a national campaign, although I sometimes, in talking with gentlemen about it, said that I thought it would be a good thing for them to subscribe because of the bearing of the national campaign on a State campaign."

Mr. PLATT did not think that he had talked with President McCurdy along this line, but he may have brought the subject up in this way before President McCall. Mr. PLATT said that he could not recall any of the details in regard to these campaign contributions, as he kept no record of them.

Q. Are you acquainted with any contributions that have been made to anyone for the purpose of favoring the candidacy of anyone for office outside of those contributions you have mentioned?—A. I never had any such thing broached to me at all.

Q. Or for the purpose of aiding a candidate for judicial office?—A. No; there never has been any suggestion in regard to any candidate.

Q. With reference to the matter of campaign expenses, in reference to judicial nominations?—A. I never heard of such a thing in my life.

HAS NO KNOWLEDGE OF THE MONEY'S USE.

Mr. Hughes wanted to know if Senator PLATT had any knowledge of what disposition had been made of the contributions by the insurance companies for State campaigns.

"I don't know anything about it, sir," replied the Senator vigorously. "I turned these contributions over to the State committee, and then my connection with them ceased."

Q. Do you know whether by virtue of such contributions any allotments of money were made for the purpose of helping the campaign of candidates for the legislature?—A. There was not, that I know of.

Senator PLATT denied that he had ever been asked on behalf of the insurance companies to intervene in any way in their favor by reason of such contributions.

Mr. Hughes said that he had been asked to inquire whether the Senator desired the committee to understand that his relation to contributions by insurance companies began only ten years ago.

"I would not say ten years ago," replied the Senator. "I could not specify the date, but I should think it was as much as ten years ago."

Q. Was it as long ago as twenty years?—A. I doubt it.

Q. About 1885 or 1886, did it begin?—A. I can't remember.

Q. It might be fifteen years or more?—A. Yes, sir.

The Senator added that the figures which he had given would, however, hold good for whatever time it was.

Mr. Hughes turned then to the subject of justification for these contributions.

"I should think," said Senator PLATT, "that they were justified in making contributions while the gold issue was at stake."

Q. Take the course of our State campaigns—of course you are familiar with them for many years. What has there been in them that would justify an insurance company contributing to the expense?—A. Well, I should not want to pass upon that.

Q. If you have an opinion, of course we should be glad to have it, but the point I want particularly to get at is this: What suggestion was there to the insurance companies of any quid pro quo? What were the insurance companies to get out of the fact that they had made the contribution?—A. There was not any suggestion of any sort.

Q. What advantage could they really get?—A. They got it through me as being connected with the State committee.

Q. How would they get it through you?—A. Well, they would suppose I would be very likely to defend them at times when it was necessary. I never had occasion to do so.

Mr. Hughes wanted to know what Senator PLATT meant by that.

"That they would expect me," said the Senator, "to support them, naturally, for anything that they thought was right and they were for."

Q. And have they ever requested your support in any manner?—A. They never have.

Q. In what matters could you properly give a company support in return for such contributions?—A. Well, I don't know.

Q. I understood you to say they would expect you would support them or defend them. Now, what class of possibilities had you in mind in saying that?—A. I didn't have any class of possibilities in mind at all, because where their interests were involved they might come to me for help.

Q. To see that the legislature did not enact legislation which they thought hostile to policy holders?—A. That is about what it would amount to.

Mr. Hughes wanted to know how Senator PLATT could control such a situation. The Senator replied that he could not control it, but that he might have some influence.

Q. Through the disposition of the moneys in the election of legislators?—A. Oh, I could not say that.

Q. Isn't that the way it really comes about, Senator, that the use of these contributions in the election of candidates for office puts the candidates more or less under a moral obligation not to attack the interests supporting them?—A. That is what naturally would be involved.

Q. Isn't that really what is involved?—A. I should think so.

Q. That is what you meant when you said they would expect you, through your relations with the State committee, to defend them?—A. Yes, sir.

Senator PLATT testified that he knew nothing about "Judge" Andrew Hamilton, the New York Life's legislative supervisor, and that although he had met Andrew C. Fields, the Mutual's legislative agent, once or twice, he knew nothing about his work at Albany. Mr. PLATT said that, so far as he knew, the insurance companies had no influence in the appointment of the superintendent of insurance. Mr. PLATT said that he knew nothing about the things which the insurance companies had done to shape legislation in their favor in this State.

When the Senator was excused he was thanked both by the chairman of the committee and Mr. Hughes, and, in turn, extended to them his thanks. After the Senator had left the room the suggestion was made to Mr. Hughes that Mr. PLATT would have been glad, if he had been questioned, to have told more in detail how the funds which he had turned over to the State committee had been used by Chairman Odell in furthering the election of men to the legislature who would be favorable to his rule.

The suggestion as it came to Mr. Hughes was not at all authoritative, but he started toward the door to call Senator PLATT back. The Senator, however, had disappeared, and Mr. Hughes, after conferring a few moments with Chairman Armstrong, decided that the ground had been thoroughly covered by him, and that Senator PLATT had had an opportunity to make any statements that he desired.

So the fact of such contributions is clearly brought out, acknowledged, without any dodging; for I must compliment the Senator from New York for the manliness and consciousness of rectitude with which he testified, and I have not the slightest doubt that not a dollar of this money ever stuck to his fingers. But I think practically all will agree that the legislature of New York has been controlled in the interest of insurance companies, and that the lame and impotent inspection, the miserable farce of an inspection for the protection of the policy holders which the investigation has disclosed, is the direct result of the debauchery of the administrative and legislative branches of the government of New York by these campaign contributions.

In this connection I have here an editorial from a leading Republican paper of the city of New York—the New York Press. It is very meaty; and it has some blood in it, too. It is dated October 12. I will ask that the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE MOTIVE OF THE MUTUAL'S CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

President McCurdy and his fellow-grafters in the Mutual Life persist in saying, and in saying under the obligation of a solemn oath, that their motive for contributing to the campaign funds of 1896, 1900, and 1904 was to save the country from "the menace of free silver."

In 1896, when the menace of free silver was great, and when business men were warranted in supporting the Republican ticket with all their might, by putting up money for legitimate campaign expenses (but only their own money), the Mutual Life's contribution to the McKinley fund was $15,000.

In 1900, when Bryanism still was a danger, though not so great a danger as four years before, because the free-silver platform had narrowly escaped defeat in the Kansas City convention, the Mutual Life's contribution to the second McKinley fund was increased to $35,000—more than twice the amount subscribed in the year when the Democratic and Populist parties were almost unanimous in their enthusiasm for free silver.

In 1904, when there was no mention of free silver in the Democratic platform, and when the Democratic candidate for President pledged himself to the gold standard, the Mutual Life's contribution was increased to $42,500, or nearly three times the amount contributed by the company in the campaign when free silver really was a menace.

The fact that the "national honor" was in danger in 1896 and 1900 did not justify the misappropriation of other people's money then. But the plea that in the Roosevelt-Parker campaign free silver was a menace is so wildly absurd that it is only a waste of time to prove that the Mutual Life crooks did not believe there was any danger of free silver in case of Parker's election at the time they made the contribution to Messrs. Cortelyou and BABCOCK, and did not believe it when they said under oath that their motive in putting up the $42,500 in 1904 was to save the country from the "menace" of free silver.

Now, we do not contend that the Mutual grafters have committed perjury in their testimony about the motive of the Hanna-Cortelyou-BABCOCK subscriptions. Perjury is not easily proved. It may be possible to convict the younger Mr. McCurdy of perjury for swearing that he did not know the salary of his father, when his duties as an officer of the Equitable not only gave him every opportunity of knowing, but made it his duty to know. But men may take oath that they did a certain thing for a certain reason, when everybody recognizes that a totally different motive controlled their action, without laying themselves open to a charge of perjury.

We do contend, however, that the officers of the Mutual have lied about the motive of their contributions to politics.

The proof is overwhelming, and they furnish it themselves.

When the Mutual crooks say the $42,500 stolen from the policy holders last year was used to avert the menace of free silver, everybody knows they lie.

But the testimony of Mr. Robert Olyphant, a Mutual trustee who O. K.'d the political thefts, heaps a ton of corroboration on the invincible proof that the "national honor" was not the controlling motive of the crime. Mr. Olyphant testifies that the contributions to campaign committees came out of the fund called "For confidential legal services."

What was the nature of this fund? Out of it was paid, in 1904, over $300,000 in addition to the $42,500 to Mr. Cortelyou's committee. It was used to promote legislation in various States, aiding insurance graft. It was spent prodigally on the suffocation of laws meant to help the policy holders. As in the New York Life, it was dished out in $25,000 or $50,000 chunks by disbursing officers, on their own testimony, without a question of its purpose. When it was spent, the "Andy" Hamiltons of the Mutual made a confidential accounting to Mr. Granniss or Dr. Gillette or Mr. McCurdy. Mr. Hughes can not find one item in the records showing how this vast sum of more than $300,000 in a single year, of many millions in the life of the Mutual, was expended. The Mutual officers admit that the uses to which the money was put made it extremely unwise to require itemized accounts.

This fund was for blackmail and bribery.

It was out of this fund that the $42,500 "to save the country from the menace of free silver" was taken. Says Mr. Olyphant: "I have heard that there were contributions made to the national committee, and, if there were, I suppose they came out of that fund ['confidential legal services'], and it was looked upon as legal services."

Not, then, to save the country from the menace of free silver? It was "legal services." The true motive thus stands revealed in sharp relief against the falsely professed motive. It was meant to buy protection for life-insurance graft through Mr. Cortelyou's committee and through Mr. BABCOCK's committee, and the money stolen from the policy holders with this purpose came out of the confidential fund for bribery and blackmail in State legislatures.

On the eve of the last election President Roosevelt issued a statement vehemently denying that he had promised official favors or immunity from justice to the corporate contributors to the Republican campaign fund. The people believed him then, and they believe him now. Mr. Cortelyou issued a statement, too, but it did not deal with life-insurance contributions or mention any contributions specifically. In the light of the Armstrong committee disclosures Mr. Cortelyou owes the people an explanation, which he could best make by volunteering as a witness in the insurance investigation.

When Mr. Cortelyou does make his explanation we have no doubt he will deny with all the force at his command that there was any understanding with the McCalls and McCurdys and Hydes whereunder the power of the national committee was pledged to protect the Big Three from hostile or blackmailing legislation in the various States where the influence of the national committee could be exerted to that end.

If Mr. BABCOCK, of the Congress committee, should think it worth while to protest his political virtue he probably will deny that the $2,500 for which he "touched" the Mutual was used to save himself from the wrath of the people of his district, where he narrowly escaped defeat for his treachery to the Republican party.

Mr. Cortelyou, who owes the public an explanation, may be able to convince us that he did not give the Mutual grafters the slightest reason for supposing that they would get anything in return for their $40,000 but an honest administration and a square deal. Nevertheless, the fact will remain that the money was paid over to him with the hope and expectation on the part of the Mutual crooks, the New York Life crooks, and the Equitable crooks that whenever the influence of the national committee was needed tho help the Big Three's fights in politics the help would be forthcoming—if not from Mr. Cortelyou, then from a large number of other members of the old Hanna machine, who have sold themselves over and over again for less money than the Big Three was always willing to pay for blackmail and bribery.

Mr. Cortelyou is not the whole national committee. He was not the national committee when it kicked Governor La Follette out of the Chicago Convention. He was not the national committee when it refused to stop the perennial scandal of barter in Black Belt delegates. He was not the national committee when it recognized the foul Addicks gang. He can not control the action of the Senators on that committee who have sold out the Republican party on railroad legislation, who have smothered pure-food bills, who have "vindicated" Dietrichs, who have swindled the Government in postal and land frauds. It was from these purchasable associates of Chairman Cortelyou, if not from that gentleman, that the Big Three grafters expected a return in kind for the boodle paid out of the special and confidential fund which is devoted to bribery and blackmail.

This is justification, we believe, for our statement that, while technically the Mutual crooks have not committed perjury in this particular instance, they have lied under oath on the witness stand.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to inquire what is the newspaper from which that clipping was taken?

Mr. TILLMAN. The New York Press, one of the leading Republican papers in the city of New York. I am glad to be able to say there are some good men in the Republican party. There are lots of them in this Chamber. There are millions of honest Republicans in this country, as has been shown by the Philadelphia and the Pennsylvania and the Cincinnati elections. There is still hope for the country. I am not in despair, though I was getting to be very pessimistic.

Mr. President, I have here something more. I want to keep the record straight and to get it all in in one batch, so that it can be read all at one sitting, and a not very long one at that.

It will be recalled that in October of last year or November, about a week or two before the national election, the Democratic candidate for the high office of President brought down an avalanche of invective and adverse criticism, and I may say abuse. upon his head because of some of his utterances. I will read some of these to illustrate or illuminate the question of campaign contributions and debauchery. I read from the Washington Post of November 5, 1904.

In his initial platform speech of the campaign at Madison Square Garden last Monday night, Judge Parker said:

"Congress creates a new Department of Commerce and Labor. Of that Department the President of the United States appoints a Secretary. That Secretary was his private secretary. Within the Department provision is made for the collection from large corporations, including the so-called trusts, of information which, it is to be borne in mind, is to be submitted to the President for public or private use, as he may direct. By grace of the same Executive, this Secretary, through whose Department this information is collected, becomes the chairman of the Republican national committee. His chief duty it has been, and still is, to collect funds for the purpose of securing the election of the President. And it is now notorious that there has resulted from this organized importunity—whatever may be the precise way in which it is made effective—an overflowing treasury to the committee, of which boast is openly and continually made. Although this may be satisfactory to the conscience of Republican leaders, it must, I firmly believe, be condemned as nothing short of scandalous, not alone to myself or the Democratic party, but by the American people as well."

I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, his remarks at the Cooper Union meeting.

There is a still uglier page to the general story. An example is before us of how the effort of the people to free themselves from a burden can be seized upon by the unscrupulous and itself made the agency whereby the burden is bound more firmly upon their backs. The clamor of the people against the trusts rose to the point where recognition was necessary. A new Department of the Government was created—the Department of Commerce. To that Department was intrusted inquisitorial power over the great corporations. Its head, the Secretary of Commerce, was made a Cabinet officer. But, lest honest business interests should suffer, lest unscrupulous competitors should take unfair advantage, it was provided that the results of the Department's investigations into the affairs of any corporation should be confidential. They were and are to be placed in the first instance at the disposition of the President, and in his discretion only are they to be made public and become the common knowledge of the people.

Extraordinary powers these, and marking an extraordinary faith of a people in its elected Chief Executive. And how has this Administration responded to this trust? It places at the head of this new Department, as the first Secretary of the Department of Commerce of the United States, the private secretary of the President. What the Department's researches were we know not. Of the results attained by such researches we are not informed.

When, however, the present campaign opened the Secretary of Commerce resigned his office, and at the request and as the personal representative of the President became the chairman of the Republican National Committee to bring about, if it might be so, the election of his patron to the Presidency. And, lest any should err, it was at the time of his resignation authoritatively announced that at the termination of the campaign he would be summoned again to the Cabinet to fill another Cabinet office. I leave it to you to say whether or not, in your estimation, the vicious circle is complete.

The article continues:

At Hartford, Conn., on Thursday night, Judge Parker made his accusation even more emphatic. He said:

"Born, as it [the Department of Commerce and Labor] was, of a union between the trusts and the Republican party, the parallel of this legislation in scandalous features does not exist upon our statute books to-day. It puts into the hands of the President and of the Republican party the means of continuing its hold on the reins of government"—

I think "on" would have been better than "upon." I am sometimes a little curious on English, and I did not read that right because it used the preposition—

"without limit as to time, through the possession of secrets of trusts which, under the terms of the legislation itself, he may or may not make public or private, as he directs.

"We know full well how the opportunity for the use of that legislation had been availed of in this campaign. No statute could have been better devised for the successful 'financing' of the present election of the candidate of the Republican party, or for its indefinite perpetuation in power.

"In the promotion of our business interests we need a Department of Commerce and Labor. The problems involved are many, and difficulties have to be overcome at every turn, so that all the ingenuity and honesty of our people will be required in order to attain the best results in the shortest time and with the least waste of effort.

"But we do not want a Department of Commerce and Labor whose Secretary shall go out from it every four years, after he had filled his brain and his notebooks with the secrets of all the great corporations and combinations which depend upon the Government for business or favors, in order not to serve the people, but to raise money to corrupt them. Nor do our people want a Department to send its statisticians at the expense of the Government, into the service of a great political committee, in order to put forth doctored statistics.

"We want a Department of Commerce and Labor which will furnish our merchants, farmers, manufacturers, and workmen with the fullest and latest information, intelligently and honestly obtained, and so fairly prepared that dependence may be placed upon it as a real guide. We want to know what other countries are doing in industries, and this is all the more important because we feel sure that in none of them has the head of such a Department retired from his work to go out into the business world in order to collect blood money.

"We do not not need and ought not to have a modern inquisitor who exploits corporations to collect money for corrupting the franchise, or electing pliant legislators, or capturing the electoral vote of pivotal States."

That is a very strong indictment of what the candidate of the Democratic party for President last year supposed to be a grievance, a wrong, and an abuse. He had no direct and positive proof. He had only the circumstantial evidence that it was practicable and he jumped at the conclusion that, therefore, it was possible and had been used. But, as I said, it brought down an avalanche of vehement denial and I might almost say brutal criticism, among others from the President himself, who in his letter dated at the White House November 4, 1904, used this red-hot language:

That contributions have been made to the Republican committee, as contributions have been made to the Democratic committee, is not the question at issue. Mr. Parker's assertion is in effect that such contributions have been made for improper motives, either in consequence of threats or in consequence of improper promises, direct or indirect, on the part of the recipients. Mr. Parker knows best whether this is true of the contributions to his campaign fund, which have come through his trusted friends and advisers who represent the great corporate interests that stand behind him. But there is not one particle of truth in the statement as regards anything that has gone on in the management of the Republican campaign.

Now, I want to say that election disclosed the fact that the Republican party did not need a solitary dollar to elect Theodore Roosevelt. It need not have put a speaker in the field. It need not have sent out a document. It need not have employed a brass band or done any of those things which are called "legitimate campaign expenses." He would have been elected anyhow, because of the prosperous business conditions in the country and the confidence of the American people in the honesty and patriotism of the man. That is my belief.

Yet, in the Washington Post, which is a pretty reliable paper—sometimes it stumbles, but in the main it wants to be clean and decent and give everybody a square deal—I find last Sunday an exposé or disquisition. I do not know what the foundations in fact are, but the man signs his name. and I understand he is a thoroughly reliable and reputable neswpaper man—and upon the whole the newspaper men are about as reliable as any other class. They will lie sometimes like we do, but as a general thing they want to deal fairly with great public questions where their papers will permit, and they will deal fairly with public men, but sometimes they get orders that such a man must be flyblown, and in order to hold their job they go at him and put on him the microbes of disability and of all kinds of adverse criticism, or ignore him and smother him and shut him up, bottle him up, or seal him up, and all that kind of thing.

But the Post, as I said, is a pretty clean paper, about as clean as we have got, and I would say for the benefit of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom the resolution I had the honor to offer yesterday was referred for the investigation of national banks, that if they begin to pull on the string with any kind of vigor as evidencing sincerity of purpose and honesty of intention, I may later on be able to furnish some clews and indicate certain lines to enable them to get light if they really mean to get it. But the Post had in its Sunday edition of December 3 the following:

TRUTH ABOUT ROOSEVELT'S CAMPAIGN FUND—NATIONAL COMMITTEE HAD LESS THAN $1,900,000—CLEVELAND'S WAS $4,000,000.

There were over 4,000 known contributors to Roosevelt's fund, and the largest single contribution was $75,000 or $100,000 from an unknown donor—

Gracious, wasn't he liberal! He did not want a foreign embassy or something like that, like honest Mr. Hyde. He was not like the other man, although I have forgotten his name. My old memory is getting ramshackle and the bell will not ring every time, but I remember some one Mr. Cleveland nominated once, I believe, for a high diplomatic position.

Mr. MALLORY. Van Alen.

Mr. TILLMAN. Thank you. Your memory is better than mine, although I believe I am a younger man than you are. He had contributed largely to the Democratic campaign fund or had been instrumental in getting others to do so, and demanded as his compensation that he should represent this great Government abroad. I am glad to say he did not get it.

The Post goes on:

Bliss and Cortelyou ignorant of Hyde's diplomatic aspirations—Fund nearly a million less than in 1900.

WHAT IT HAS COST TO ELECT PRESIDENTS.

Fund of the Republican national committee in 1904	$1,900,000
Fund of the Republican national committee in 1900	2,800,000
Fund of the Republican national committee in 1896	3,800,000
Fund of the Democratic national committee in 1892	4,100,000

We poor Democrats, you know, are always tagged on at the tail as getting more money than anybody else and being more rotten than anybody else. I expect we are as rotten as we ought to be, and probably more so, but as far as that campaign fund is concerned, if we never had gotten a dollar and had never elected Grover Cleveland President the history of parties in this country would have been very different from what it has been since he tore us all to pieces and sunk our ship, so to speak. But I will not enter upon that discussion just now.

HOW THE REPUBLICAN FUND WAS DISTRIBUTED LAST YEAR.

I merely allude to these figures for the purpose of indicating that they have sufficient foundation in fact to warrant somebody, I hope a Senate committee, to call this man before them and find out where he got these facts, if they are facts, and then it may be they will get a clew to the real facts as to whether the national banks, and if so, which ones, and the railroad companies, and if so, which ones, have used their money to debauch the electorate and control State legislatures and Presidential elections and Congress.

I ask permission to insert this entire article from the Post of December 3.

[Special to the Washington Post.]

New York, December 2.—As the result of a careful, diligent research it is possible for the Post to allay a widespread curiosity concerning the receipts and expenditures of the Republican national committee during the Presidential campaign of 1904. This curiosity, always a natural one, was stirred to an unusual pitch when Judge Alton B. Parker, the Democratic nominee, made his charge near the close of the campaign that the Republican managers were "holding up" or "blackmailing" corporations for contributions to promote the candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt, and it has become intensified since witnesses before the legislative investigating committee have candidly admitted that big life insurance companies gave generous subscriptions. Many guesses have been made since last fall on the amount of money raised by Cornelius N. Bliss, the treasurer of the committee, but none of them has struck the mark. If at any time Mr. Bliss or Postmaster-General Cortelyou, the chairman of the committee, sees fit to make a public statement it will be found that the figures contained in this dispatch are fully confirmed.

NEARLY TWO MILLION LESS THAN 1896.

The fund with which the Republican national committee conducted Mr. Roosevelt's campaign last year was a little less than $1,900,000. Some credulous people—the result of the election indicated they were comparatively few—drew the inference from Judge Parker's ill-advised accusation that the sum ran up into many millions. Possibly others who have purely theoretical and impractical notions about the management of a political campaign may advance the argument that the fund actually raised was altogether too large for the purpose for which it was used. This may or may not be mere sophistry; but comparisons with former campaign funds shows that the Republican treasury last year was not filled to the bursting point. The total contributions in 1904 were nearly $1,000,000 less than the donations in 1900, when President McKinley was a candidate for reelection. The fund was between $1,800,000 and $2,000,000 less than that which was raised in 1896.
